The Well-Worn Path

by David Crawley

You scampered down this well-worn path
when you were just a pup.
And as we grew, I ran with you.
I struggled to keep up.

- 5 My legs grew long. Your legs grew slow.
You're happy now to walk,
ignoring all those squirrels and birds
you once would chase and stalk.

- And as we walk I think of all 10 the moments that we shared.
The day we found you at the pound,¹
you looked so small and scared.

The times I fed you table scraps
in spite of Mother's rule.

- 15 The days you greeted me with joy
when I came home from school.

- And as we walk this well-worn path,
no longer running free,
I hope I was as good to you 20 as you have been to me.

- 1 Long before there were cowboys in Texas, there were vaqueros. A vaquero could tame a wild horse. He could stop a steer without using a rope. Vaqueros worked well with their horses and could perform amazing stunts.

Caring for Cattle

- 2 At one time, Spanish ranchers in parts of Mexico, Texas, and California owned huge herds of cattle. The cattle lived on large areas of land. And all those cows needed a lot of food. The animals were allowed to roam freely across the land so they could find enough food to eat.

- 3 Caring for the cattle was a big job. Ranchers hired vaqueros to keep the cattle safe. Vaqueros spent long days in their saddles, riding their horses across the open land. They scared away any animals that might harm the cattle. And if a cow was injured or sick, it was the vaquero's job to help it.
- 4 Spring was a busy time for vaqueros because that was when the calves were born. Each rancher sent a team of vaqueros to search for the new babies and their mothers. The vaqueros would bring the entire herd back to the ranch to be counted and sorted. Each team was responsible for searching a specific area. Together they would search hundreds of miles to find stray cattle. Sometimes the cattle were hard to locate among the rocky hills and in the small valleys.

Which Cow Belongs Where?

- 5 Once the cows and calves were found, it was the vaquero's job to bring all the cattle to a large fenced area so they could be counted. Getting cattle to move in one direction was not an easy job. Using their horses, the vaqueros worked together to surround the cattle. Then they herded the animals into the fenced area.
- 6 Next the cattle were sorted and counted. Vaqueros checked the brand, or special mark, on a cow's body to tell which rancher owned it. Each calf would receive the same brand as its mother.

Getting the Job Done

- 7 Special tools and clothing helped vaqueros with their work. They wore sombreros to protect them from the sun, wind, and rain. Vaqueros tied a sarape to their saddles. They could use it to protect themselves in cold or wet weather and at night while they slept. The sarape also helped them herd the cattle. Vaqueros would swing their sarape over their head to get the cattle to move. Something vaqueros didn't wear while doing their job was a pair of boots. They usually worked barefoot or in sandals.
- 8 A lariat was another important tool for vaqueros. It was used to catch cattle or animals that could harm the cattle, such as coyotes. If a vaquero roped a coyote, everyone knew he was good at his job.
- 9 Every good vaquero needed a well-trained horse that could make quick, sharp turns. The horses were also trained to step in front of a cow that was trying to escape from the herd. And they could stop suddenly if the vaquero pulled back on the reins.

Training the Cowboys of Texas

10 Spanish ranchers didn't stay in Texas. When they moved to other areas, their cattle and the vaqueros often remained. The new settlers who moved into Texas didn't know what to do with the cattle. But the vaqueros did. The vaqueros worked with the new settlers and taught them how to care for cattle. Soon some of these settlers were able to do the same work as the vaqueros, but they became known by a different name—Texas cowboys.
