Her daughter has become a symbol of hope that her life can get better despite all that she has lost.	Edited text: 5. (a) Her daughter has become a symbol of hope that her life can get better despite all that she has lost. (b) Student responses will vary. Some students may feel that the mother's competitiveness and longing to seem superior keep her from seeing her daughter's character—her own needs get in the way. Others may argue that the mother does understand her daughter, has insights into her character, and simply tries to push her to be more ambitious and disciplined.

Students may argue that the story's events prove the mother's criticism, because the narrator is embarrassed at the piano recital as a result of her disobedience and lack of effort. Other students may claim that in being disobedient, the narrator stands up for herself successfully, which disproves the mother's criticism.

Explique a los estudiantes que a Don Quijote le gustaban tanto los libros de aventuras que un día decidió ir a tener sus propias aventuras. Cuente el episodio de los molinos, en el que Don Quijote, que tenía mucha imaginación, confundió los molinos con gigantes que lo querían atacar. Contraste la actitud de Sancho Panza, que, al tener menos imaginación, solo vio unos molinos. Pida a los estudiantes que comparen esta historia con ¡Misión cumplida! Luego, pregunte a los estudiantes si alguna vez jugaron a transformar un lugar con la imaginación, por ejemplo, jugar a la pelota en el patio de casa como si fuera un estadio, o explorar los árboles del parque como si fuera una selva tropical. Pida a los estudiantes que comenten sus experiencias usando el siguiente marco de oración: Una vez imaginé que _____ era _____, y yo era _____. "	"Lenguaje oral: Comparar y contrastar Recuerde a los estudiantes que los personajes principales de ¡Misión imposible! son Rena y Cristóbal. Trabaje con los estudiantes para hacer una lluvia de ideas sobre palabras que describan a cada personaje y anote las respuestas en un mural de palabras. Luego, pida a parejas de estudiantes con diferentes niveles de dominio del lenguaje que comenten en qué se parecen Rena o Cristóbal a un personaje de otro cuento que hayan leído o en qué se diferencian. Pida a las parejas que se turnen para usar las palabras del mural de palabras para comparar y contrastar a Rena y Cristóbal con otros personajes. Proporcione marcos de oraciones como estos para apoyar el desarrollo del lenguaje oral: Rena y el personaje de _____ se parecen. Ambos son _____. Cristóbal y el personaje de _____ son muy diferentes. Cristóbal es _____ pero _____ es _____."
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781418268527	Teacher	Unit 1, page T66	Top of page (Spanish column), Spanish Language Development note	"Oral Language: Using Imagination Display a typical image of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza and identify them by name. Tell students that Don Quixote loved adventure stories so much that one day, he decided to go out and have his own adventures. Discuss the episode about the windmills, when Don Quixote, who was a very imaginative man, thought that some windmills were giants ready to attack him. Contrast this to Sancho Panza's attitude, who was less imaginative than Don Quixote and just saw some windmills. Have students compare this story to ¡Misión cumplida! Then, ask students if they have ever changed a place using their imagination while they were playing. For example, have they ever played ball in their backyards as if they were in a stadium, or explored the trees in the park as if they were in a tropical forest? Have students talk about their experiences using the following sentence frame: (See Spanish.)"	"Oral Language: Compare and Contrast Remind students that the main characters in ¡Misión imposible! are Rena and Cristóbal. Work with students to brainstorm words that describe each character and record the responses on a word wall. Then have student pairs of mixed language-dominance levels talk about how Rena or Cristóbal are similar to or different from a character in another story that they have read. Have partners take turns using words from the word wall to compare and contrast Rena and Cristóbal with other characters. Provide sentence frames such as these to support oral language development: (See Spanish.)"

Cansado del maltrato, el muchacho decidió ir a buscar miel con su hermana. Le dijo que prepara al árbol y se cubriera la cabeza para no enojar a las abejas. Ella obedeció. Entonces, el muchacho cortó todas las ramas para que ella no pudiera bajar y se fue. Cuando ella descubrió la trampa, lo llamó "¡Cacuy... Turay!", que significa "detente, hermano". Pero él no volvió, y la noche convirtió a la muchacha en un pájaro que llora llamando a su hermano."	"El pájaro azul y el coyote Hace muchísimo tiempo, había un pájaro de plumas grises y feas. Este animalito se sentía muy triste. Todos los días se bañaba en una laguna de un bellissimo color azul mientras cantaba una canción. Al cuarto día, todas sus plumas se le cayeron. Pero al quinto día, sus plumas volvieron a crecer azules y hermosas. Un coyote que vivía cerca lo vio y le dijo: "¡Yo también quiero ser azul!" El coyote se bañó en el lago por cuatro días. Al quinto día, el coyote lucía un esplendoroso color azul. Se puso a pasear mirando a todas partes para ver si alguien se daba cuenta de lo fino y hermoso que se veía. Se puso a correr rápidamente mirando hacia el suelo para ver si su sombra era también azul. Estaba tan distraído que no se dio cuenta y chocó contra un árbol, el cual se cayó y levantó tierra por todos lados que cubrió su pelaje. Desde entonces, todos los coyotes son del color de la tierra."

Enfóquese en recursos, tales como rima, ritmo, repetición, asonancia y aliteración para llamar la atención de los estudiantes a las matices y la eufonía particular del español. Pida a los estudiantes que trabajen en grupos o parejas para leer en voz alta y memorizar algunos cantos sencillos o rimas. Anime a los hispanohablantes a demostrar la pronunciación correcta según sea necesario. El desarrollo del lenguaje de todos los estudiantes beneficiará mucho a través de usar regularmente el vocabulario de uso frecuente y los patrones que se reflejan en las rimas". Visite PearsonRealize.com para el desarrollo profesional sobre prácticas basadas en la investigación."

D., University of Texas at San Antonio Regularly present to your class popular Spanish language rhymes, songs, and poems. Focus on devices such as rhyme, rhythm, repetition, assonance, and alliteration to draw students' attention to the nuances and particular euphony of Spanish. Have students work in groups or pairs to read aloud and memorize some simple chants or rhymes. Encourage native speakers to model correct pronunciation as needed. Regular oral and aural exposure to the high-frequency vocabulary and patterns often reflected in rhymes will greatly benefit all students' language development. See PearsonRealize.com for more professional development on research-based practices."

COMENTEMOS Pida a un estudiante que explique cómo se da cuenta de la diferencia entre un pronombre personal y un pronombre objeto."	"Los escritores usan diferentes tipos de pronombres dependiendo de: •si el pronombre funciona como un sujeto, •si el pronombre se usa para señalar que algo le pertenece a alguien, •si el pronombre sirve para indicar que algo está cerca, •si el pronombre indica una pregunta o una exclamación, •si el pronombre se usa después de una preposición. DEMOSTRAR Y PRACTICAR Pida a los estudiantes que transcriban la siguiente oración a medida que usted la dice varias veces: Siempre soñé con viajar a la luna. ¡No saben cuántas veces lo soñé! Me imagino que está llena de pozos. Una vez, mi hermana me dijo que, en su imaginación, la luna tiene muchos bosques luminosos. Ayer mis padres me regalaron un telescopio. Ellos me dieron una gran sorpresa. Gracias a este telescopio voy saber si hay o no bosques luminosos. ¡Para mí la luna es un misterio! Pida a los estudiantes que subrayen los pronombres. Diga: Cuántas es un pronombre exclamativo; su es un pronombre posesivo; ellos es un pronombre personal; este es un pronombre demostrativo y mi es un pronombre preposicional. Dirija la atención de los estudiantes a la tabla de la p. 151 del Libro interactivo del estudiante . Pida a los estudiantes que digan oraciones para cada hilera de pronombres. Anime a los estudiantes a que se sientan con confianza para crear oraciones usando correctamente los distintos pronombres. COMENTEMOS Pida a un estudiante que explique cómo se da cuenta de la diferencia entre un pronombre personal y un pronombre posesivo."

As you read the following selections, think about how the authors use language to create their descriptions. Decide whether this use of language is effective, and if it could be more or less so."	Made statements more audience appropriate: "Figures of speech—words or phrases that cannot be taken literally—are important in informational texts. Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 07	Lesson 07 Reading Skill: Figurative Meaning, Part 2: Reading Skill, Figurative Language	The quoted statements and the lack of "you" after the first mention distances the content from the reader: What would you say if you were very hungry? One person may say, "I am very hungry. I need something to eat." Another might say, "I am so hungry that I could eat a cow!" Or "you can probably hear my stomach growing from two blocks away!" Which of these statements best describes the person's hunger? That would just depend on the situation and the person. Authors use figurative language to engage the reader and enhance what they are describing in a text.	Personalized it to make it more engaging: What would you say if you were very hungry? You might say, "I am very hungry. I need something to eat." Or you might say, "I am so hungry that I could eat a cow!" Which statement better describes how hungry you are? If you picked the second statement, you're right. The first statement simply expresses your hunger. The second statement, on the other hand, shows just how hungry you are. That statement is an example of figurative language.

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 08	Lesson 08 Reading Skill: Connotative and Denotative Meaning, Part 1: Reading Selection, Reading Introduction	Introduction is unnecessarily wordy: The words that an author chooses are of great importance. As readers explore a text, they may come across a word that produces certain feelings—either positive or negative. An author should be aware of this, and they should make sure that the words they choose to use have the correct connotation as well as denotation. As you read the following selections, keep in mind how authors of informational texts choose the words that are used to describe people, places, and things.	Simplified and put the introduction in the context of a reader to better engage: As readers explore a text, they may come across words that produce certain feelings—either positive or negative. Authors know this, so they choose their words carefully. As you read the following selections, consider the words the authors use in their writing. Locate words that trigger emotional responses in you.
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 08	Lesson 8 Reading Skill: Connotative and Denotative Meaning, Part 2: Reading Selection, Connotative and Denotative Meaning	Anecdote was unnecessarily wordy: Abigail and her sister Emma have different feelings about their great aunt Mary. Aunt Mary will not buy anything that is not on sale. She spends hours every week clipping coupons. And whenever she buys something, she keeps it until it breaks and cannot be repaired. Abigail thinks this is very admirable, and her thriftiness is one reason why she and Emma always receive great gifts from Aunt Mary—she is always on the lookout for great deals. But Emma thinks that Aunt Mary is too stingy for her own good. She hates going shopping with Aunt Mary because whenever she sees something she likes, Aunt Mary just says, "No, it's too expensive. Let's wait for it to go on sale, and then we'll see." Abigail and Emma would use different words to describe the way that Aunt Mary spends money. Is Aunt Mary thrifty or stingy?	Cut back the length without changing the focus: Imagine that two sisters, Abby and Emma, have different feelings about their Aunt Mary. Aunt Mary will not buy anything that is not on sale. Abby likes that her aunt is so thrifty. After all, Abby thinks that Aunt Mary always gives them great gifts. Emma, on the other hand, thinks that Aunt Mary is stingy. She doesn't like going shopping with Aunt Mary because whenever Emma sees something she likes, Aunt Mary just says, "Let's wait for it to go on sale!" The words thrifty and stingy are examples of the difference between connotative meaning and denotative meaning.

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 08	Lesson 8 Reading Skill: Connotative and Denotative Meaning, Part 2: Reading Selection, Connotative and Denotative Meaning, What are Connotative and Denotative Meaning?	Section was too wordy, rambling: The dictionary is a long book. In fact, the longest English dictionaries give definitions for over 1 million words! Many of the words in the dictionary mean the same thing. For example, thrifty and stingy or residence and home have the same literal meaning, or denotation. But do they truly have the same meaning? Words with the same denotations can produce different feelings when they are used in a text. The associations that people make with words are called connotations. A word's connotation will affect how a reader understands a text.	Refocused and shortened: When choosing the right word to use, an author considers both the denotation and the connotation of the word. So, to understand what an author is writing, you must know about both types of meaning. The denotative meaning of a word is its dictionary definition or its literal meaning. The denotation of both thrifty and stingy is "careful about spending money." The connotative meaning, on the other hand, concerns the emotional associations of a word. The connotations of thrifty and stingy are different, and readers react differently to these words: The word thrifty suggests a positive quality. People who are thrifty are wise about how they spend their money. They think carefully before they buy something. The word stingy suggests a negative quality. People who are stingy are greedy or selfish when it comes to their money.

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 11	Lesson 11 Reading Skill: Structural Elements, Part 2: Reading Skill, Structural Elements	Intro is wordy: Have you ever thought about how the author of an informational text chooses how to arrange the information in his or her writing? An author's choice of sentences, paragraphs, sections, and chapters in informational texts and articles can greatly affect the reader's understanding of a topic. An informational text is made up of structural elements. The structural elements of a text are like bricks of different sizes that are used to build the text itself. These elements include sentences, paragraphs, chapters, and sections. The text structure defines how these elements are organized and work together to create a connected whole—the text itself.	Shortened introduction: An informational text is made up of structural elements. These elements include sentences, paragraphs, sections, and chapters. These elements are like bricks of different sizes that are used to build the text itself. They connect to create a whole. Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 13	Lesson 13 Reading Skill: Organizational Structure, Part 2: Reading Skill, Organizational Structure	Extraneous information in this paragraph: You have learned about the structural elements that make up a text. You briefly explored the different types of organizational structures that these elements help support. Every writer writes with a purpose, and the organizational structure of a text helps the author achieve that purpose. For example, imagine that an author is writing an informational text about World War II. If the author's purpose is to explain what caused this war, the author would organize the text much differently than if he or she wanted to convince readers that World War II was the most deadly war in history.	Honed in on the important information: An organizational structure is the way ideas are introduced and developed in a text. Identifying the organizational structure can help readers better understand the text. This is because the organizational structure provides a logical pattern that enables readers to grasp the author's purpose and central ideas.

This text structure begins with the proposition. This may be a request to do something, or it may be an argument that one idea or course of action is preferable to another. The proposition is followed by evidence. Proposition-and-support texts generally include reasons that the proposal makes sense and include evidence from research or experts to support these reasons. You can sometimes recognize the proposition-and-support text structure because it includes a lot of facts, statistics, examples, and opinions from experts, often in direct quotations. The idea or suggestion that is proposed in a proposition-and-support text is generally an opinion. The author's goal is to convince readers to accept the proposition as true. Often, the author will include the opposing side of his proposition to prove the opposition wrong. To find a proposition-and-support structure, look first for the proposition. The author can offer one single solution, or several that might be appropriate. This text structure generally begins by introducing a problem. In some cases, the problem may be something that readers are unaware of, but it can also be a problem that everyone knows about. The author then describes actions that, in the author's opinion, could or would solve the problem. This type of organizational structure is often used to describe a complex situation in which there is no clear, correct answer. Tickets to attend baseball games are very expensive but the baseball leagues want to encourage younger people and families to attend games during the season. As you read the proposed solution in the following paragraph, consider the problem-and-solution structure. under a certain age. This will bring in a younger audience and it will encourage greater participation at games. More families will be able to share the love of baseball with a whole new generation of potential baseball fans. In this text, the author begins by clearly stating a problem—the increase in ticket prices at baseball games is keeping families and younger people from attending games. Here were thirteen beasts of us over half a thousand other beasts. It was a living hell, that prison, and it was up to us thirteen there to rule. It was impossible, considering the nature of the beasts, for us to rule by kindness. We ruled by fear. Of course, behind us, backing us up, were the guards. In extremity we called upon them for help; but it would bother them if we called upon them too often, in which event we could depend upon it that they would get more efficient trustees to take our places. But we did not call upon them often, except in a quiet sort of way, when we wanted a cell unlocked in order to get at a refractory prisoner inside. In such cases all the guard did was to unlock the door and walk away so as not to be a witness of what happened when half a dozen hall-men went inside and did a bit of man-handling. London is kind to his readers by stating outright that he will discuss a problem in this paragraph. The problem is that there are "thirteen beasts of us over half a thousand other beasts. It was a living hell, that prison, and it was up to us thirteen there to rule." In other words, there are thirteen hall-men ("beasts") assigned to keep order over far more fellow prisoners, "over half a thousand other beasts." The solution is to rule "by fear," not by "kindness." London elaborates on this "solution" two paragraphs later, with an example of the morning wash time. He states that the situation was "Thirteen against five hundred, and the segment was confusing in its explanation: Cause and Effect	Better chunking helps to clarify focus and readability: Problem and Solution Like the proposition-and-support organizational structure, the problem-and-solution organizational pattern functions in both persuasive and informational texts. London starts The Pen, Part 2, in The Road with a passage that has a problem-and-solution organizational structure: Bear with me a moment and look at the problem. Here were thirteen beasts of us over half a thousand other beasts. It was a living hell, that prison, and it was up to us thirteen there to rule. It was impossible, considering the nature of the beasts, for us to rule by kindness. We ruled by fear. Of course, behind us, backing us up, were the guards. London directly states that he will discuss a problem in this paragraph. The problem is that there are "thirteen beasts of us over half a thousand other beasts." In other words, 13 hall-men ("beasts") are assigned to keep order over a large number of fellow prisoners: "over half a thousand other beasts." London also directly states the solution: "We ruled by fear." London elaborates on this "solution" two paragraphs later, when he provides an example of the morning wash time. He states that the situation was "Thirteen against five hundred, and we ruled by fear." To maintain that fear, London says that the hall-men "could not permit the slightest infraction of rules, the slightest insolence." In other words, the hall-men did not allow anyone to break the rules, nor did they allow any sort of disrespectful behavior from the 500 men. If a prisoner misbehaved, the hall-men "hit him hard, hit him with everything."

Read this paragraph. I remember a handsome young prisoner of about twenty who got the insane idea into his head that he should stand for his rights. And he did have the right of it, too; but that didn't help him any. He lived on the topmost gallery. Eight hall-men took the conceit out of him in just about a minute and a half—for that was the length of time required to travel along his gallery to the end and down five flights of steel stairs. He travelled the whole distance on every portion of his anatomy except his feet, and the eight hall-men were not idle. In this case, the cause that starts the chain of events is the young prisoner standing up for his rights, "an insane idea." London does not deny that the man "did have the right of it," but, as he explains, "that didn't help him any." The effect of the young prisoner's defiance is brutal violence from the hall-men. And London indicates later in this paragraph that this effect is a cause, too. It produces a desired effect on the young prisoner and the other convicts, plus an unintended effect on London himself. He had learned his lesson, and every convict within those walls who heard him scream had learned a lesson. So had I learned mine. It is not a nice thing to see a man's heart broken in a minute and a half. The lesson learned is that disobedience will be punished severely, and so the end effect is obedience. As with step-by-step texts, writers often use cause-and-effect organizational structures to explain the relationship between events.	Streamlined discussion by refocusing: Cause and Effect As with step-by-step texts, writers often use cause-and-effect organizational structures to explain the relationship between events. Jack London uses the cause-and-effect organizational structure in The Pen, Part 2. Read this paragraph. I remember a handsome young prisoner of about twenty who got the insane idea into his head that he should stand for his rights. That disobedience results in the young prisoner being thrown down the stairs of the prison. The disobedience (the event) resulted in punishment (the effect).

This pattern is sometimes obvious. If you look at "Twist a Balloon Dog," you can clearly see how the text is organized. How to Make a Balloon Dog Step 1: Inflate the balloon. Placing the open end of the balloon over the tip of the pump hose or nozzle, hold the balloon in place as you pump air into it. Be careful that the balloon does not slip! Inflate the balloon a little more than halfway (do not worry—air will fill this space as you twist the balloon), and then carefully tie a knot at the end of the balloon. steps going up are labeled Step 1, Step 2, and Step 3. These kinds of texts show readers how to do something or describe how something is done. This pattern is sometimes obvious. For example, the organizational structure of "Twist a Balloon Dog" is clear because it contains numbered steps. Each step pops out at readers because the steps are headings in a larger-sized font. The numbered steps direct readers. They know to start with the nose and end with the tail. In addition, they remember to lock the ears in place! I texts that use the step-by-step organizational structure are marked as clearly. Read the paragraph from The Pen, Part 2, from The Road. This paragraph shows how something is done. The following will illustrate how we drummed up business in the graft of passing the punk. A row of newcomers is installed in your cells. You pass along before the bars with your punk. "Hey, Bo, give us a light," someone calls to you. Now this is an advertisement that that particular man has tobacco on him. You pass in the punk and go your way. A little later, you come back and lean up casually against the bars. "Say, Bo, can you let us have a little tobacco?" is what you say. If he is not wise to the game, the chances are that he solemnly avers that he hasn't any more tobacco. All very well. You condole with him and go your way. But you know that his punk will last him only the rest of that day. Next day you come by, and he says again, "Hey, Bo, give us a light." And you say, "You haven't any tobacco and you don't need a light." And you don't give him any, either. Half an hour after, or an hour or two or three hours, you will be passing by and the man will call out to you in mild tones, "Come here, Bo." And you come. You thrust your hand between the bars and have it filled with precious tobacco. Then you give him a light. In this paragraph, London describes the steps the hall-men followed so that certain prisoners could light their cigarettes using "punk," a kind of lit match. London begins by stating he will be describing how something is done: "how we drummed up business in the graft of passing the punk." Now, read another paragraph from the same selection. In this paragraph, London explains how he gets a letter to a female prisoner in another section of the prison.

Life was not monotonous in the Pen. Every day something was happening: men were having fits, going crazy, fighting, or the hall-men were getting drunk. Rover Jack, one of the ordinary hall-men, was our star "oryide." He was a true "profesh," a "blowed-in-the-glass" stiff, and as such received all kinds of latitude from the hall-men in authority. Pittsburg Joe, who was Second Hall-man, used to join Rover Jack in his jags; and it was a saying of the pair that the Erie County Pen was the only place where a man could get "slopped" and not be arrested. I never knew, but I was told that bromide of potassium, gained in devious ways from the dispensary, was the dope they used. But I do know, whatever their dope was, that they got good and drunk on occasion. Our hall was a common stews, filled with the ruck and the filth, the scum and dregs, of society—hereditary inefficient, degenerates, wrecks, lunatics, addled intelligences, epileptics, monsters, weaklings, in short, a very nightmare of humanity. Hence, fits flourished with us. These fits seemed contagious. When one man began throwing a fit, others followed his lead. I have seen seven men down with fits at the same time, making the air hideous with their cries, while as many more lunatics would be raging and gibbering up and down. Nothing was ever done for the men with fits except to throw cold water on them. It was useless to send for the medical student or the doctor. They were not to be bothered with such trivial and frequent occurrences.	Shortened and used ellipses: ead the passage from Part 3 of "The Pen." Life was not monotonous in the Pen. First of all, around fifty percent of the business at the plaza comes from people under the age of eighteen. Secondly, most parents do not want to baby-sit their teenagers at the plaza. Another point is that kids need a positive place to hang out after school. I would agree that there have been a few times at the plaza when customers were bothered by a handful of kids acting out. Even businesses, like the restaurant Bon Appétit, lost some guests that were eating their dinner because they were disturbed by some kids who were goofing off outside. However, most of Bon Appétit’s customers were not bothered. Those who caused the problems should be punished. It seems as though you feel that one rotten apple spoils the barrel. Punishing everyone for someone else’s mistake does not seem fair. By keeping all the unsupervised youth out of the plaza after five, you are punishing those who did nothing wrong. The proposition is, “Wherever mischievous youth go, trouble will always follow.” The writer then provides evidence to support the notion that this proposition is true. This organizational structure is used for the purpose of convincing the reader of this claim.	Examples of propositions are effective as review tools: Proposition and Support The proposition-and-support organizational structure consists of a proposition, or statement of opinion, and evidence to support the opinion. Read these propositions: Homework should be banned. Homework should be limited to two hours per night. Homework can teach time-management skills. Homework provides additional practice for students. For any of these propositions, facts, statistics, examples, and even the opinions of experts could be used as evidence.

When writing, an author tries to establish himself or herself as credible so that the reader will trust in him or her. He or she wants the reader to believe that what he or she says is reliable. This can be done by using credible, reliable sources, establishing common ground with the reader, and using proper grammar, spelling, and punctuation throughout. Pathos Pathos is the appeal to the audience's emotions. This type of appeal involves appealing to an audience's needs and values. Emotional appeals are sometimes a form of faulty reasoning, but they can be used effectively in a logical, reasoned argument. Pathos should truly support the claim the author is making, and should not be used to distract the reader from the point, to misrepresent the topic, or to scare the reader into accepting faulty reasoning. Logos Logos is the appeal to reason. The author uses relevant and sufficient evidence and logical reasoning. You also know that the author wants you, the reader, to agree that the snacking ban is a smart idea. That's why the author has provided reasons along with evidence to support those reasons. But authors also can do more. They can use certain tools, called rhetorical or persuasive devices, to help convince the audience. The Rhetorical Situation To understand what those devices are, put yourself in a similar situation to the one above. Imagine that you are writing a letter to convince your friend that a person he or she has been spending a lot of time with is not a true friend. This would be your claim: I think being friends with so-and-so is a bad idea. Perhaps the reasons you include to support the claim are these: So-and-so has asked you to do things you are not comfortable doing. So-and-so constantly insults you and laughs about it. Once you create your claim and reasons, you are actually in what is called a "rhetorical situation," where your goal is to persuade your audience to believe you. A rhetorical situation occurs when a person attempts to persuade another person or group of people to do or believe something. Along with the claim, reasons, and evidence, you have three techniques or "appeals" you can use to convince your friend: an ethical appeal, also called an appeal to ethos an emotional appeal, also called an appeal to pathos a logical appeal, also called an appeal to logos (continued on next row)

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 17	Lesson 17 Reading Skill: Evaluating Claims and Arguments, Part 2: Reading Skill, Evaluating Claims and Argument, Support for Claims	Better chunking needed: Readers need to pay attention to the sources that the author provides for the evidence. If a piece of evidence does not come from a familiar and reputable source, readers should ask themselves whether it is good evidence. Similarly, if claims are supported with expert opinions, the author needs to provide information about the expert and what makes that person one. Some experts are biased, meaning that they favor one side over another in spite of evidence that may be present. Identifying the expert's title and organization helps readers understand how the bias may affect the expert's opinion and the author's evidence. When evaluating evidence, ask the following questions: How well does the evidence support the claim? If a claim is common knowledge, or something that is already known by most people, it usually does not need evidence to support it. Suppose the author is making the following claim: "In the Northern Hemisphere, winter is the coldest season of the year." To support the claim, the author could use a graph or table showing the average temperatures for each of the four seasons. But, most readers already know that winter is colder than the other three seasons, so the author does not need to spend time supporting this claim with evidence. If the author wanted to claim that "the common cold is easily overcome," however, the author might need to provide evidence in support. Needs simplification through chunking: Why Do Authors Write? Authors write for a variety of purposes. They write to entertain an audience, to inform them about a topic or some aspect of a topic, or to persuade readers to think differently about something or to do something. All of these are examples of the author's purpose. An author's purpose is his or her reason for writing about a topic. It is based on what the writer wants readers to know, learn, think, or do. Authors of texts on the same topic may have quite different purposes. Consider, for example, an informational piece about the local subway system, an underground train which people use to get from one part of a big city to another. An author might write a piece about the subway to inform the reader about its history or to explain how it operates. Another author may want to persuade the reader to ride the subway instead of choosing other forms of transportation. And still another author might write about the subway system to show how it is unique or how it is an example of what is good or bad about all subway systems. So how can readers figure out the author's purpose? The best way to start is to ask, "What is the topic or idea?" "Why is the author writing about this topic or idea?" "What does the author want readers to know, think, believe, or do?" When discussing the author's purpose, the goal is not to determine what the author's message is, but rather what the author wants the reader to do with this message. Clues to the author's purpose are often found in the text's organizational structure. Authors writing to persuade often use a proposition-and-support or problem-and-solution structure. Is the author's purpose to persuade, inform, or entertain, or all three? He may be trying to persuade the reader that it was a difficult moment, and so he offers numerous details to show that the moment was difficult. The author informs the reader of how he—and, most likely, his companion—felt as they said goodbye. Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 19	Lesson 19 Reading Skill: Author's Perspective, Part 2: Reading Skill, Author's Perspective	Chunking needed for readability: Author's Perspective You already know that identifying the topic and the purpose of an informational text are important things to do. In a similar way, you should also consider what the author's perspective on the subject is. Understanding Author's Perspective The author's opinions on his or her subject are influenced by his or her perspective or point of view. In art, perspective refers to a technique used to make drawings and paintings more realistic. Artists learn to draw people, objects, and scenes from different angles or from different distances. Where the artist stands affects how he or she sees things. You may have had similar experiences, examining things from different perspectives. Look at the illustration below. Each man is looking at the same number painted on the ground. But because they are looking at it from different perspectives, each sees a different number. The man on the left side of the number sees a six, while the man on the right side of the number sees a nine. Who is correct? They both are! Authors also have different opinions based on where they stand on an issue or the attitude they take toward the topic. The author's perspective influences his or her perception. This, in turn, impacts his or her opinions or feelings about the topic.	Added subheads, shrunk image: Author's Perspective An author's perspective refers to the values, ideas, emotions, and beliefs that affect a writer's approach. In art, perspective refers to ways of showing spacial relationships. A painting of a landscape looks realistic because of perspective. Far away items in the painting are smaller than closer objects. Artists learn to draw people, objects, and scenes with sizes and spacing that create the illusion of distance. Where the artist stands affects how he sees things, and what he paints. You may have had similar experiences of examining things from different perspectives. What Does Someone See? Consider the image of the two cartoon characters. Each cartoon figure is looking at a number painted on the ground. Who is correct? They both are! In a similar way, authors have different perspectives based on their own values and experiences. This unique viewpoint of an author influences the ideas and opinions in that author's work. That is why determining an author's perspective on a topic is important to do, even beyond identifying the topic and purpose.

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 19	Lesson 19 Reading Skill: Author's Perspective, Part 2: Reading Skill, Author's Perspective, Understanding Author's Perspective	Better chunking needed: It is important for authors to have perspective in their writing. The author's perspective allows readers to see the subject of the text through another person's eyes. Through the writer's perspective, readers are allowed to experience situations that they could not in their own lives. They are given a chance to see how others view the subject, based on different life experiences. Different perspectives expose readers to ideas and opinions they may not have considered before. Authors may also embrace multiple perspectives over the course of one text. They can present their own point of view on the subject then show how other people view the subject, too, to give readers a more complete understanding. For example, if an author writes about a controversial subject—such as year-round schooling or banning junk food from schools—the author would likely present both the pros and cons of the idea.	Added another subhead: Perspective and Readers Grasping the author's perspective allows readers to see the subject through another person's eyes. Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 19	Lesson 19 Reading Skill: Author's Perspective, Part 2: Reading Skill, Author's Perspective, Understanding Author's Perspective, Finding Perspective	Too much text without sufficient chunking: Finding Perspective When you read an informational text, it is important to consider the author's perspective on the subject. Keep in mind that the author's perspective influences his or her opinions. This may influence what details the author chooses to include and how the author chooses to present these details. Understanding the author's perspective, which include his or her beliefs, feelings, and opinions, will help you better understand the text. For example, if you know that the author loves squirrels as you are reading an informational text about squirrels, you can consider how the author's feelings might bias the information presented. This author might leave out information about the squirrels' bad behavior at bird feeders! In other words, look for places where bias—prejudice for or against something—might influence what information an author includes or excludes from an informational text. Some authors clearly demonstrate their perspective. In a persuasive text, authors typically directly state their opinions. In other cases, you may need to dig deeply to make inferences that help you uncover the author's perspective. In other words, you need to engage in a close reading of the text. You may need to look at the analogies, definitions, examples, facts, quotations, and statistics and consider what point of view they reflect. You might look at not only the details that are there but also what is not there (in other words, what the author is not telling readers). You should also look for connotative language, the words and phrases that appeal to emotions. For example, does the author refer to squirrels as "cute" and "playful" or "pesky" and "destructive"? As an example of how to find perspective in an informational text, let's look at an example from "Road-Kids and Gay-Cats," Part 1. At that time I had attained a dizzy reputation in my chosen circle of adventurers, by whom I was known as the Prince of the Oyster Pirates. It is true, those immediately outside my circle, such as honest bay-sailors, longshoremen, yachtsmen, and the legal owners of the oysters, called me "tough," "hoodlum," "smouge," "thief," "robber," and various other not nice things—all of which was complimentary and but served to increase the dizziness of the high place in which I sat.	Chunked material better, including adding a subhead: Finding Perspective To grasp all parts of an informational text, it is important to consider the author's perspective. The details the author chooses to include indicates a perspective. It also is reflected in the way the author presents these details. When you search for perspective, look for places where an author's likes and dislikes might play a role. Do they influence what information an author includes? Do they affect the words he or she chooses? Perspective and Reading Closely Some authors clearly demonstrate their perspective. In other cases, you may need to dig deeply to uncover the author's perspective. You need to engage in a close reading of the text. Do the following: Determine the topic and author's purpose. Consider the connotations of the words the author uses to express the key ideas. Read between the lines to make inferences or guesses about the meaning. Look at the evidence and how the author uses it. Consider what perspective your findings reflect. These tasks can help you figure out the perspective of the author. Look at this paragraph from London's "Road-Kids and Gay-Cats," Part 1 of The Road. At that time I had attained a dizzy reputation in my chosen circle of adventurers, by whom I was known as the Prince of the Oyster Pirates. It is true, those immediately outside my circle, such as honest bay-sailors, longshoremen, yachtsmen, and the legal owners of the oysters, called me "tough," "hoodlum," "smouge," "thief," "robber," and various other not nice things—all of which was complimentary and but served to increase the dizziness of the high place in which I sat.

He downplays the seriousness of his crimes. He is rising higher and higher in his friends' eyes by being more and more of a criminal. From this, a reader can infer that London and his friends do not respect the law. The more they steal, the better they feel about themselves. London uses facts to show how he is regarded both outside and inside his group of friends. Static characters do not change or grow as a story progresses. Their personalities and beliefs stay the same. Flat and round characters can be static, but static characters usually play minor roles in the story. Main characters change and grow as the story progresses. Consider a story about two boys: Mark and Ajay. They both keep getting in trouble for forgetting their soccer cleats when they go to practice. Mark says, "I'm just really forgetful!" Every day Mark goes to practice, and every day he forgets his cleats and gets in trouble. Mark is a static character. He does not change. Dynamic Characters The word dynamic means changing. Dynamic characters change over the course of a story. These changes result from what happens in the story. Many times, an author does not directly describe the changes. Instead, the reader has to pay careful attention to the character's words and actions. Think of your favorite characters from books. Chances are that they are dynamic characters. Over the course of a story, they gain knowledge, develop new skills and ideas, and change in the process. Think again about the story with Mark and Ajay. Ajay is forgetful, just like Mark. Say that Ajay decides to put his soccer cleats in a basket by the front door of his house, however, and he sets an alarm on his phone to remind him to grab them before practice. At the next few practices, the coach notices Ajay has his cleats. Ajay changes. He comes up with a plan to remember his shoes. For example, y'all, which means you all, is a phrase in the dialect of the American South. Another example is when a teenager in a story greets a friend and says "Hey, man. What's going on?" This sounds more realistic than that teenager saying, "Hello. How are you this afternoon?"	Corrected informational errors: Dialect Versus Conversational Voice Authors use dialect and conversational voice in indirect characterization. Dialect is the way people in a particular place or group speak a language. This includes speech patterns, grammar, and words that are unique to that group. For example, y'all, which means you all, is a phrase in the dialect of the American South. Conversational voice is the way characters speak to one another. It captures the feeling of speaking to someone in real life. A character can speak formally or informally. He or she can be polite or rude. For example, consider a teenager in a story greeting a friend in this way: "Hey, man. What's going on?" This sounds more realistic than the teenager saying, "Hello. How are you this afternoon?" The way in which characters speak to each other tells a lot about them. How a character speaks is an important part of indirect characterization.

It describes the moment in time when the narrator first sees the community garden. In this scene, the author slows down the pace to allow time for the reader to take in everything going on around the main character. The author does this with long sentences that vividly describe what the narrator is going through, such as this one: "As I stood at the edge of the vacant lot, I was fascinated by a group of men and women hauling away brush, tilling soil, and pounding stakes into the ground." If the author were only concerned about getting the character in a scene in and out fast, the scene would likely be much shorter, with shorter sentences. Here, though, the author helps the reader really feel that the narrator is a bit torn. The narrator is fascinated, but he does not want to stay.	Chunked material: This passage is a scene that uses description and slow pacing. Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 38	Lesson 38 Reading Skill: Identifying Explicit and Implicit Information	Explicit Information Remember, explicit information is directly stated in the text. Through the narrator, the author wants to be clear about a character or event, so he or she comes right out and gives the information to the reader. The passage below from “How Bess Managed Tom” shows a clear example of explicit information. As you read, see what explicit information the author gives you about the characters. Tom’s sister Nell was a pretty girl, and being a year older than Tom, wanted to show her authority over him. The boy was rough and awkward, and just at that age when a boy refuses all meddling with “his rights.” He would put his hands in his pockets, his chair on Nell’s dress, and his feet on the windowsill. Key Concepts & Ideas Textual evidence is specific information that readers use to pull meaning from the text. Chunking needed: Explicit evidence is clearly stated information that is directly stated in the text. Implicit evidence is information that is implied but not directly stated in the text. From the explicit information through the narrator in this passage, it is discovered that Nell is Tom’s older sister and she wants to show her authority over him. Tom is rough and awkward and refuses to let people mess with “his rights,” as stated in the passage. This explicit information about each character sets up the conflict between Nell and Tom in the rest of the story. Authors typically use narrators to give explicit information when they want to make something particularly clear for the reader and leave no room for interpretation. Remember that even though explicit information is directly stated in the text, you still need to read carefully to identify it.	Chunking with bullets and white space: Remember, explicit information is directly stated in the text; the author comes right out and gives the information to readers through the narrator. Read the passage from “How Bess Managed Tom.” As you read, try to find the explicit information the author gives you about the characters. Tom’s sister Nell was a pretty girl, and being a year older than Tom, wanted to show her authority over him. The boy was rough and awkward, and just at that age when a boy refuses all meddling with “his rights.” He would put his hands in his pockets, his chair on Nell’s dress, and his feet on the windowsill. In the passage, the narrator explicitly states that Nell is Tom’s older sister, and she wants to show her authority over him Tom is rough and awkward and refuses to let people mess with “his rights” This explicit information about each character sets up the conflict between Nell and Tom in the rest of the story. The previous explicit information about the characters— that Nell likes to boss Tom around and Tom does not want to be bossed around—helps you understand why they keep fighting. The narrator also explicitly states that they fight all of the time. This explicit information helps you understand the relationship between Nell and Tom.	Focused information: The narrator explicitly states that Nell and Tom quarrel, or fight, with one other all the time. This explicit information helps readers understand the relationship between the two characters.

Read the conclusion of "How Bess Managed Tom." Then identify the explicit and information that you determine about each character. As they grew older, Bess, in the same quiet, loving way, helped him to grow wise and manly. If she had an interesting book, she always wanted Tom to enjoy it with her. If she was going to call on any of her young friends, Tom was always invited to go with her. "I can't understand," said Sister Nell, "why you should always want that boy at your elbow; he's rough and awkward as a bear." "Some bears are as gentle as kittens," declared Bess, slipping her arm through his with a loving hug, while "the bear" felt a warm glow at his heart as he walked away with Bess, and determined to be "gentle as a kitten" for her sake. Start with what the narrator explicitly states about each character. Nell thinks that Tom is "rough and awkward as bear." You also know that Tom was "determined to be 'gentle as a kitten.'" Better chunking needed: So, what does the narrator imply about each character? In other words, what implicit information is in the text? The passage starts by describing how Bess would always include Tom. The narrator implies that Bess is kind and inclusive through her actions. On the opposite note, Nell criticizes Bess's actions, even in front of Tom. Through Nell's dialogue, the narrator implies that Nell is rude. Now you take a turn. What implicit information does the narrator give you about Bess in the last paragraph? Look at what Bess says, does, and thinks, and ask yourself what it tells you about her character. The narrator implies that Bess loves her brother for who he is. The narrator includes dialogue where Bess compliments her brother instead of criticizing him, which shows she loves him. The narrator also implies that Bess loves Tom because she hugs him. Both the explicit and implicit information in this passage help the reader learn more about Bess, Tom, and Nell.	Bulleted important information: Now that you know how to distinguish between the two different types of information, practice finding the explicit and implicit information the narrator provides. d the conclusion of "How Bess Managed Tom." People see things differently. They have different thoughts, feelings, and ideas about things that happen. Some narrators tell stories that explain their own thoughts and feelings about the events that take place. Other narrators tell stories that explain the thoughts and feelings of others. Perspective refers to the narrator’s thoughts, feelings, ideas, and attitude. Point of view refers to who is narrating, or telling, the story. The narrator is the character telling the story. Narration is the way events are explained to tell a story. First-person narration is a type of storytelling in which a character involved in the story gives his or her view of events using the pronoun I. Third-person limited narration is a type of storytelling in which the narrator explains events from the view of one of the characters. Third-person omniscient narration is when the narrator explains events from the view of multiple characters. Point of View Point of view refers to the character explaining events in a literary text. In some stories, one character explains events from his or her point of view. In other stories, different characters explain events from their points of view. Types of Point of View First-person narrators are characters in the story with personal knowledge of events. They were there when things happened. They tell about events they experienced themselves. Third-person limited narrators explain the views of just one of the characters. Organizational structure refers to how the story’s events are strung together, or the order in which they are presented. Chronological structures present events in time order, or the order in which they happened. Description is a type of structure that provides details about the characters, events, or setting to help readers get a clearer understanding of them. Structural Elements To create a story structure, authors describe events in an order that makes sense. They write sentences, scenes, and—in larger works—chapters. The ideas must flow from one to another so that readers understand what is happening in the story and how one event leads to another. Each sentence contains an idea. Each scene includes sentences that the author strings together to describe an event or experience. Scenes fit into chapters. Each chapter can contain any number of scenes, all of which help explain a part of the story’s plot. A summary tells the reader what happens by combining a number of events into a brief account. Organizational Structures The events that make up a plot can be strung together in different ways to fit into a story structure. Some stories make the most sense when experiences are described in chronological order, or the order they happened. Chronological order is just one way to tell a story so that the text flows smoothly throughout the story’s plot. Another common way to tell a story is with description structure, which focuses on describing a character, place, or event in detail. Both of these can be used together as well.	Looking Into Story Structure A story’s plot includes the events that happen in the story in the order they happen. As you read, look closely at the similes, metaphors, personification, idioms, and hyperboles you come across. When you recognize a figure of speech, slow down your reading to visualize what the author is conveying. Think about why the author used a figure of speech instead of literal language. Ask yourself: How does the figure of speech add to my understanding? Being able to recognize and interpret figurative language will deepen your understanding of the stories you read. The denotation of tattered is "ripped and worn." Tattered has as more positive than negative connotation because it is describing a keepsake—the bear. The emotional meaning associated with this word tells the reader that the bear was well loved. Think of how different it would be if the author used a word such as shabby or battered. Both of those words have similar denotations to tattered but negative connotations that would imply that the bear was not cared for.	Focused explanation: The denotation of tattered is "ripped and worn." In this passage, tattered creates a sense of longing or of emotional connection because it is describing a keepsake—the bear. The emotional meaning associated with this word tells the reader that the bear was well loved. Think of how different it would be if the author used a word such as ratty or worn-out. Both of those words have similar denotations to tattered. But the associated emotions would imply that the bear was not cared for.

The author wants to contrast his positive feelings about finding the bear with what could have happened if they never discovered the bear. The author could have said "misplaced" or "missing," as these words have similar denotations to undiscovered and forgotten. However, the words misplaced and missing have positive connotations. Even though the denotation of misplaced and missing is negative, these words have a positive emotional association. The author selected words with negative connotations to reveal that it would have been terrible if the bear had never been discovered, because it holds value for his family. Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 44	Lesson 44 Reading Skill: Understanding the Impact of Word Choice; Part 2: Reading Skill; Understanding the Impact of Word Choice; Tone; Tone Words	More effective chunking and formatting needed: Now you will take a few words from the chart and create some sentences that authors might use to establish different tones. Imagine that you are writing about a boy who is walking to the park. If you want to create a positive, excited tone, you might say that he "skipped along the path" or that he "raced all the way to the swingset." Because people tend to skip when they are happy, the word skipped conveys a happy tone. And because the idea of racing suggests being in a hurry and wanting to get somewhere fast, the word raced conveys a tone of excitement. If, on the other hand, you want to create a more negative, worried tone, you might say that he "lumbered along" or "he dragged his feet." Lumbered implies moving slowly without much energy, and dragged is similar. Both of these word choices convey a more negative attitude.	Chunked material and formatted more effectively: Different Tones Imagine that an author is writing about a boy who is walking to the park. If the author wants to create a positive, excited tone, he or she could write this: The boy skipped along the path. Because people tend to skip when they are happy, the word skipped conveys a happy tone. Or consider this sentence: The boy raced all the way to the swingset. Because the idea of racing suggests being in a hurry and wanting to get somewhere fast, the word raced conveys a tone of excitement. If, on the other hand, you want to create a more negative tone, you might say that "the boy lumbered along" or "he dragged his feet." Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544009	Teacher	Lesson 53	Lesson 53 Reading Skill: Understanding the Elements in a Play; Part 2: Reading Skill; Understanding the Elements in a Play	Characteristics of a Play A playwright is the person who writes the text of a play. This person must select the subject matter of the play; establish its purpose and point of view; and develop the plot, setting, and characters. A playwright writes differently from other authors because he or she must create a text for actors to use to tell the story on stage. Playwrights must think about staging, which is everything that is needed to bring the play to life on the stage. One element of staging is the setting. In a story, the setting is when and where the events take place. It's the same thing in a play, but in a play you actually see the elements of the setting when it is performed onstage. However, when you just read a play, the setting is described with words, so you will need to use your imagination to visualize the setting. Another element of staging is the stage directions, which tell the actors how to move or speak their lines. Think back again to what you learned about the characteristics of a play. You learned that a play has special features. For example, conversation between two or more characters is called dialogue. A single character sometimes gives a speech called a monologue. When reading a play, you will also see that each character's name is displayed before what he or she says and any stage directions telling where he or she should move or act while they talk as well as providing details about the setting. Fun Fact Even though a playwright writes a play, the term is not "playwrite." This is because the suffix "wright" means craftsman. Years ago, this suffix was widely used to describe people's jobs. For example, a person who made wheels was called a "wheelwright." A person who wrote plays was a "playwright," and the term is still used today.	The Playwright's Role A playwright is the person who writes the text of a play. This person must select the subject matter of the play establish its purpose and point of view develop the plot, setting, and characters A playwright's work differs from what other authors write. Playwrights must create a text framework that actors use to tell the story on stage. Playwrights must think about staging, which is everything that is needed to bring the play to life on the stage. Elements of Staging One element of staging is the setting. Just as in stories, the setting of a play is when and where the events take place. But in a play, the audience actually sees some version of the setting on the stage. Staging includes set design and props that create the sense of time and place. Another element of staging is the stage directions, which tell the actors how to move or speak their lines. A play script usually includes stage directions before each scene to describe the setting. Plays are designed to be acted out. When you read a play instead of seeing it on stage, it is important to read the description of the setting in the playwright's stage directions from the script. When you read plays, you must use your imagination to visualize the setting Dialogue in Plays You have learned that plays have special features. One example is dialogue. As you know, dialogue is the conversation between two or more characters. In plays, dialogue occurs when characters speak to one another on stage. A single character sometimes gives a speech called a monologue. When you read a play, you actually read the script that the playwright created. The script clearly shows what the characters say and when they say it. Each character's name appears before the lines of dialogue he or she is supposed to say. The script sometimes also has stage directions telling the actor where to go on stage how to act while speaking

Metaphor On a dark, clear night, you might say that "The sky was a starry umbrella." Clearly, this is figurative language, as the sky cannot be an umbrella. This description shows how the sky looked or felt. It makes a comparison of the sky to a starry umbrella. This type of comparison is called a metaphor. Here is another example of a metaphor. The new sofa was an elephant. By directly comparing the sofa to an elephant, this statement does more than just describe how big the sofa is. Because of the other meanings associated with an elephant, this metaphor might suggest that the sofa was very heavy and awkward to move around.	Chunked information for decreased cognitive load, created more engaging figures of speech where appropriate. Metaphor A metaphor compares two unlike things, just as a simile does. Metaphors, on the other hand, do not use the words like or as. Instead, metaphors equate the two unlike things. To use the comparison about the sky and the umbrella, the metaphor would be "The sky is a starry umbrella." Again, this is a figure of speech because it cannot be taken literally. Here are some other examples of metaphors: My grandmother's eyes are blue sapphires. Sapphires are very blue gemstones, so Grandma must have very blue eyes. The thunder was a lion. Lions are known for their loud roar, so the thunder must be very loud and sound like a roar.

It appears in sentence 4 here: Before you can understand the information in a text, you need to know what the text is about. That may sound easy, but informational texts are often packed with facts, examples, and other details. This can make it tough to determine what the author actually wants readers to know. When you first determine the central idea of a text and how the author develops this idea, it is far easier to understand the information and the relationship between facts and other details.	"Central Idea" is included in the first sentence here: To really understand a text, you need to grasp its central idea, or what the author wants you to know about the topic. That may sound easy, but informational texts are often packed with facts, examples, and other details. Those elements can make it tough to determine what the author's main message actually is! But identifying that central idea is an important first step. After that, it is far easier to see relationships, supporting facts, and other details.

Another example is a simile. A simile is like a metaphor, except that it uses the words “like” or “as” to compare two things that are not alike. You might change the metaphor you saw earlier to a simile and say, “The sky was like a starry umbrella.” Here are some other examples of similes: Chris’s new coat was as white as snow. That new sofa is as big as an elephant. Comparing one thing to another emphasizes the characteristic being compared, even when the things being compared are unlike. Something that is white as snow is very, very white. Similarly, something that is as big as an elephant is very big. In both cases, the use of figurative language makes the writing more interesting than just saying that the coat was white or the sofa is very big.	Chunked information for decreased cognitive load, created more engaging figures of speech where appropriate: Simile A simile compares two things that are not alike. Grasshoppers are known for their ability to jump very high. That characteristic is transferred onto Darnell through the simile. That new couch in the living room is as big as an elephant. Personification gives animals or objects human characteristics. Here are some examples: The leaves danced in the wind. The leaves are not literally dancing. Giving them human characteristics reinforces what they might look like. As the wind tosses them through the air, it looks as though they are dancing. I could hear the book crying my name, so I bought it. The book was not literally crying the speaker’s name—or anything else, for that matter. This use of figurative language tells that the speaker was intrigued by the book, but it does so in an interesting way.	Chunked information for decreased cognitive load, created more engaging figures of speech where appropriate. Publisher	New Content	9781948544009	Teacher	Unit 1	Amazing Journey Welcome to Unit 1.	Need intro text.	Welcome to Unit 1 of English 061! You are about to begin an amazing journey, one where you will discover new and important things about the world of information in which you live. Yes, you read that right—the world of information! Think about it. Anytime you communicate with a friend, family member, or classmate, or anytime you are on Instagram or texting, you are sending and receiving information! You wrote an essay? It consists of information. You read a chapter? It's information. You completed a project? You guessed it ... It includes information. Informational text, as it is called, is what this course is about. Through each unit of the course, you will learn new things as both a reader and a writer of informational text. So, consider each unit an important stop on this journey. As with any journey, you'll need a road map. It keeps you on the right track and helps to avoid detours! Here's the road map for this course: You will complete six units. Each unit has five lessons. Each of the first four lessons of each unit includes four paths: vocabulary and language reading writing a checkpoint, or quiz The last lesson of each unit includes a review and a unit exam. All five lessons in each unit include a discussion board, where you will communicate with your classmates about course-related information! On this journey, you will also follow another road—literally! In each lesson, you will read a chapter or part of a chapter of The Road by Jack London. London decided to become a real-life hobo—and wrote about it. Before your journey begins, here is one final bit of information. The sixth unit of the course is the course review unit, which will help you reach your final destination on this journey: a good grade! But, along with that, you will have gained deeper understanding of your world of information. First Stop: Unit 1!
Publisher	New Content	9781948544009	Teacher	Unit 1	Amazing Journey Welcome to Unit 1.	Need intro text.	As a reader, you will explore the elements of informational text: central ideas and key details important individuals and events explicit and implicit evidence inferences You will learn how to use context clues to understand unfamiliar words and concepts that you encounter as you read. You will also learn important Greek and Latin roots and affixes to help expand your vocabulary. As a writer, you will explore the research process: how to create a research question how to evaluate and cite sources how to paraphrase and quote information Time to begin!

Publisher	New Content	9781948544009	Teacher	Unit 10	Believe in Yourself Welcome to Unit 10.	Need intro text.	Welcome to Unit 4! You've reached the halfway mark on your journey! Congratulations! Halfway there's a good place to be. A lot is behind you, don't you agree? You haven't just started, but you're not quite done. Not Unit 6 yet, but past Unit 1! Does that give you a clue as to this unit's focus? You guessed it—poetry! Your journey through this unit will cover a lot of poetic territory: from the elements of poetry to poetic structures to the techniques poets use to figurative language in poetry. You will also learn about graphic elements in poetry. Along with those topics, you will learn about the different types or forms of poetry. You will go from counting syllables to counting lines as you discover many of the different types of poems! You will also examine point of view and perspective in poetry as well as topic and theme. And, yes, you will be writing some of your own poetry! Also included in this unit will be practice with pronoun case and indefinite pronouns. You will also be introduced to drama—but not the kind of drama that your friends might cause! The drama you will learn about in this unit includes plays that are performed in front of real audiences. Ready, set, go into Unit 4. You've already learned lots, but there's still more!
Publisher	New Content	9781948544009	Teacher	Unit 11	Over the Rainbow; Welcome to Unit 11	Need intro text.	Unit Introduction added (Note: Unit 5 in this course corresponds to Unit 11 in the Texas course): Welcome to Unit 5! What is the same? What is different? Those two questions are the focus of this unit. From poem to poem and from story to poem, you will discover similarities and differences in the way each handles topic and theme. You will also compare and contrast reading and listening. Are you wondering what that means? You will read poems and then the same poems will be read to you through audio recordings! What are the similarities and differences between those two experiences? You will find out. Also included in this unit is more drama! You will learn about staging and other elements of plays. You will compare and contrast plays with stories. You will explore the four literary mediums—text, audio, video, and live performance—and compare and contrast each with the others. You will also discover more about pronouns, and you will write, revise, and submit your poetry!

Need intro text.	Welcome to Unit 3! In the first reading of this unit, you will discover that Dorothy and her friends are getting closer to Oz—just as you are getting closer to the halfway mark of this course! You won't see emeralds or need green glasses to continue on your journey through this unit. However, you might still learn some "gems" or some bright and sparkling skills and information. In fact, one of those priceless gems is summary! Why is this a priceless gem? Writing an effective summary is one of the most important skills to master for high school and college. In this unit, you will learn how to identify the important information that goes into a summary of a story why story summaries must be objective In addition, you will analyze poorly written and well-written summaries. Maybe these aren't gems, but authors use figurative language, connotation, and word choice to make their writing sparkle! You will analyze these in stories, as well. You will also learn about count and non-count nouns and predicate adjectives here. Your personal narrative will need some additional attention, too! You will submit your final masterpiece at the end of the unit. Be sure to stay on that "yellow brick road" so you will reach your destination. After you complete this unit, you are halfway there!

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781948544016	Teacher	L36 Writing Skill	L36 Writing Skill, under heading "What Is a Narrative?"	Introductory paragraphs under heading "What Is a Narrative?" were potentially confusing for students, mixing fictional and nonfiction narratives. Previously stated: Narrative writing tells about an interesting event or experience. A narrative story may be fiction, which is partly or entirely made up, or nonfiction, which is based on fact. The purpose of most narratives is to entertain the reader, though some nonfiction narratives, such as biographies or histories, also help to inform. A well-written narrative can help the reader understand something new about the world and/or the reader's own life. Authors get ideas for narratives from real events that happened to them. Authors of nonfiction tell true stories about their own real-life events, or about things that interest them. Authors of fiction may draw from their own real-life events as inspiration for their stories. In this project, you will write a personal narrative. A personal narrative comes from an event that happened to you. However, you may choose to turn it into either a nonfiction or fiction narrative.	Revised to state: A story, or narrative, can be about real or imaginary people or events. A narrative may be nonfiction, based on fact. Or it may be fiction, entirely made up. Usually, the purpose of both kinds of narratives is to entertain readers, although they can also help to inform or persuade. A well-written narrative helps the reader understand something new about the world and/or the readers' own lives. In this project, you will write a nonfiction personal narrative about an event that happened to you.

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781457311512	Teacher	255	Teacher Steps 1 and 2	Teacher Steps 1 and 2 have been revised to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(I)(ii).	Teacher Steps 1 and 2 have been replaced with the following: "[1]Read aloud the section about making adjustments while reading. Use an analogy to help students understand the concept of monitoring their comprehension and making adjustments when they don't understand something they have read. For example, you could compare reading a complex text to playing a soccer game. Players on a team don't simply pay attention to the ball. They monitor the positions of the other players, they look out for obstacles on the field, they use their knowledge from prior games to improve their play, and they stop at half-time to listen to guidance from their coach before they keep playing. Similarly, strong readers don't simply pay attention to the words on the page. They continuously monitor whether they understand what the text is saying, they look out for obstacles like unfamiliar words, they draw on prior knowledge to help them understand the text, and they take breaks to ask questions of themselves or of their teacher when they need help understanding. [2] Use the About the Author paragraph to model how to make adjustments when reading. Read the first sentence out loud, and then use a think aloud to model asking questions of the text. You might ask, "What does it mean to publish novels? Does that mean he wrote the novels?" "
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781457311512	Teacher	256	Teacher Step 5	Teacher Step 5 has been revised to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(I)(ii).	Teacher Step 5 has been replaced with the following: "[5] As students are reading, monitor their progress. Be sure they are engaged with the text and remind them to pause and make adjustments when their understanding breaks down."
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781457311512	Teacher	259	Teacher Step 7	Teacher Step 7 has been revised to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(I)(ii).	Teacher Step 7 has been replaced with the following: "[7] During or after reading the text for the first time, guide the class in a discussion about the setting and how it relates to the characters. Ask the Making Observations questions and evaluate students' initial understanding of the historical novel. Have them pair share their responses to the questions in the final bullet point, and assess whether they effectively monitored their own comprehension, noted when their understanding broke down, and made appropriate adjustments."
Publisher	New Content	9781457311444	Student	35	Working from the Text, below Step 9	An additional step has been added below Step 9 to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(F)(ii).	The following content has been added as new Step 10 and subsequent steps have been renumbered: "Use the evidence you gathered to express your understanding about Odysseus's character. In one or two sentences, describe Odysseus."
Publisher	New Content	9781457311444	Student	41	below The Return and the last bullet of the Setting a Purpose for Reading	New content has been added below the The Return section and an additional bullet to the Setting a Purpose section to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(F)(ii).	The new content reads as follows: "Using Evidence to Support Understanding [B-head] To understand how Meg's journey is an example of the Hero's Journey archetype, you will need to read closely and make inferences about the characters and the conflict. These inferences will help you come to a greater understanding about the text as a whole. Strong readers keep track of evidence that develops their understanding of a text. One strategy for keeping track of evidence is annotation. Use the Setting a Purpose for Reading instructions to help you annotate the text and gather evidence. [Setting a Purpose for Reading bullet] Underline evidence in the text that helps you understand IT's character. 8.5(F)"

Publisher	New Content	9781457311444	Student	125	below the Making Observations	New content has been added below the Making Observations feature to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(G)(i).	The following new section of instruction has been added, and subsequent steps have been renumbered: "Evaluating Details to Determine Key Ideas [B-head] [4.] Examining details in a text can help readers understand the key ideas the author wants to convey. Look back at your color-coded underlining of the similarities and differences between Grant and Lee. Use those details you underlined to create a Venn diagram in your Reader/Writer Notebook. Evaluate the details you organized into the Venn diagram to determine the key ideas in this text. [teacher edition anno]Though they came from different backgrounds and had different aspirations, both men were great generals."
Publisher	New Content	9781457311444	Student	255	above the Setting a Purpose for Reading	New content has been added above the Setting a Purpose for Reading feature to strengthen alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(I)(ii).	The following new section of instruction has been added: Making Adjustments While Reading[B-head] While reading complex texts, readers sometimes need to pause and make adjustments when their understanding breaks down. When you don't understand something you are reading, try the following adjustments: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Reread the word, phrase, or sentence that you do not understand. Reread out loud to see if hearing the sentence helps you understand it. • Use your background knowledge to make sense of what you are reading. • Ask questions about the text. Jot down questions in the My Notes section and return to them later to see if you know the answer after reading more of the text. • Use annotations, like metacognitive markers, to note the parts of the text where you have questions or comments."
Publisher	New Content	9781457311444	Student	259	Making Observations	New content has been added above the Making Observations feature to strengthen alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(I)(ii).	An additional bullet has been added to the Making Observations feature that reads, "Where did you pause and make adjustments as you read? How did the adjustments support your understanding?"
Publisher	New Content	9781457311512	Teacher	35	Teacher Step 10	The existing Teacher Step 10 has been revised to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(F)(ii).	Teacher Step 10 has been revised to become the following three new steps, and subsequent steps have been renumbered: "[10] Complete the Working from the Text section. Check that students understand the difference between an observation of textual detail (e.g., In paragraph 5, Odysseus says he would not listen to his men) versus an inference based on the text (e.g., Odysseus is a leader whose men will follow him even when they disagree with him). [11] Model for students how to use evidence from the text to support their understanding. For example: I understand that Odysseus is a clever character because in paragraph 22, he outsmarts the Cyclops to help his men escape. Consider providing students with the following sentence frames to express an understanding of Odysseus's character using evidence from the text: I know that Odysseus is ___ because the text says ____ . I understand that Odysseus is ___ because in paragraph X it says ____ . [12] The questions starting on the next page focus on the author's technique, so it is important that all students have a chance to contribute to each response."
Publisher	New Content	9781457311512	Teacher	41	Teacher Step 1	The existing Teacher Step 1 has been revised to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(F)(ii).	The existing Teacher Step 1 has been revised to read, "Read aloud the Preview, review the four steps within the Return stage, and discuss the information about using evidence to develop understanding to activate prior knowledge and prepare students for the text."
Publisher	New Content	9781457311512	Teacher	125	Teacher Step 9	Teacher Step 9 has been revised to strengthen the alignment to TEKS breakout 8.5(G)(i).	The following content has been added to the end of Teacher Step 9: "Support students in evaluating the details they annotated to determine key ideas. Model this process during the reading of the first seven paragraphs."

State Review Panel	New Content	9780999856187	Student	Making Arguments About Ideas Across Texts [direct instruction]	after current slide 2	Literary texts can be classified into genres based on their plot, subject matter, and characters. Common literary genres include realistic fiction, adventure stories, historical fiction, mysteries, humor, fantasy, and science fiction. Realistic fiction is a story that could happen in real life. The characters resemble real life. Adventure stories usually feature believable characters but take place outside of the character's ordinary life. The plot usually includes danger or action. Historical fiction is set in the past. The plot is based on something that really happened, but some details are made up. Science fiction is often set in the future. The plot is driven by technology or science. Mysteries usually feature realistic characters. The protagonist usually solves a crime or series of crimes. Fantasies take place in unrealistic settings and feature magical creatures as characters.	new instructional material on characteristics of common types of texts (genres)

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	27	add to bottom paragraph:		Students will most likely be familiar with high-frequency words, such as "and", "but" and "the" as they will have been exposed to these words more than others. Students will demonstrate and apply their phonetic knowledge, in this lesson, by identifying these types of words, sounding them out and reading them accurately.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	27	add to bottom paragraph		Students may be familiar with how to hold a book, from watching adults hold newspapers and seeing pictures of people holding books. In this lesson, students will gain print awareness, by learning about the front cover and back cover and the correct direction to read i.e. left to right and top to bottom.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	29	add to bottom paragraph:		Have students identify all the high-frequency words in the poem by circling them. This demonstrates their phonetic knowledge. They should then sound them out, spell them and read them aloud. They should aim to find at least 25 to apply their knowledge.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	31	add to ideas for extension		Students could also put together a research based list of high-frequency words. They should aim to find at least 25.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052061	Student	206	point 9 add:		Practice spelling words you see a lot. Look at page 72. Practice spelling these words.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	27	add to bottom paragraph:		Students will most likely be familiar with high-frequency words, such as "and", "but" and "the" as they will have been exposed to these words more than others. Students will demonstrate and apply their phonetic knowledge, in this lesson, by identifying these types of words, sounding them out and reading them accurately.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	27	add to bottom paragraph		Students may be familiar with how to hold a book, from watching adults hold newspapers and seeing pictures of people holding books. In this lesson, students will gain print awareness, by learning about the front cover and back cover and the correct direction to read i.e. left to right and top to bottom.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	29	add to bottom paragraph:		Have students identify all the high-frequency words in the poem by circling them. This demonstrates their phonetic knowledge. They should then sound them out, spell them and read them aloud. They should aim to find at least 25 to apply their knowledge.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	31	add to ideas for extension		Students could also put together a research based list of high-frequency words. They should aim to find at least 25.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	32	change last line of first paragraph to:	Parents should be involved with sounding words with them when they read a bedtime story, to raise their familiarity with high-frequency words.	When reading at home, students should identify, read and spell high-frequency words. Their parents can support them and challenge them to find at least 25 in their storybook.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052078	Teacher	32	middle paragraph after the bullets add		Have students choose a book from the classroom library and pick out high-frequency words to test they have grasped what these types of words are. They should make a list of these words and read them accurately. Lastly, they should practice spelling these words.

Students will demonstrate and apply their phonetic knowledge, in this lesson, by identifying these types of words, sounding them out and reading them accurately.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052115	Teacher	73	add to bottom paragraph		Students may be familiar with how to hold a book, from watching adults hold newspapers and seeing pictures of people holding books. In this lesson, students will gain print awareness, by learning about the front cover and back cover and the correct direction to read i.e. left to right and top to bottom.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052115	Teacher	75	add to bottom paragraph:		Have students identify all the high-frequency words in the poem by circling them. State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052146	Student	18	Add:		In this lesson you will learn how to alphabetize words. To alphabetize words is to arrange the words in alphabetical order. For example, the words cat, zebra, frog and lizard would be sorted into the following order: cat, frog, lizard, zebra . You can see that these words have been alphabetized using their first letters. You can also alphabetize words with the same starting letter. To do this you would use the second letter of the word. For example, the words chair, cat, coat and clock would be sorted into the following order: cat, chair, clock, coat . You can see that these words have been alphabetized using their second letters.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052146	Student	18	add a line after fourth line		For example, a consonant is any letter other than a, e, i, o or u. A blend is when two letters make one sound. A trigraph is when three letters make one sound. You will decode words and look for these types of sounds. Words with trigraphs using vowels and consonants are vowel-consonant trigraphs. A word such as 'Sigh' ends in a consonant. We want you to find and review words with final consonant trigraphs so look at the ends of each word. A good example is the word 'catch'. Three consonants end the word and make a single sound.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788052146	Student	19	Add:		Alphabetize the words in the key words table. You should alphabetize by the first letter, and then by the second letter if you need to.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788051224	Teacher	81	Add:		In this lesson you will learn how to alphabetize words. To alphabetize words is to arrange the words in alphabetical order. For example, the words cat, zebra, frog and lizard would be sorted into the following order: cat, frog, lizard, zebra . You can see that these words have been alphabetized using their first letters. You can also alphabetize words with the same starting letter. To do this you would use the second letter of the word. For example, the words chair, cat, coat and clock would be sorted into the following order: cat, chair, clock, coat . You can see that these words have been alphabetized using their second letters.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788051224	Teacher	81	add a line after fourth line		For example, a consonant is any letter other than a, e, i, o or u. A blend is when two letters make one sound. A trigraph is when three letters make one sound. You will decode words and look for these types of sounds. Words with trigraphs using vowels and consonants are vowel-consonant trigraphs. A word such as 'Sigh' ends in a consonant. We want you to find and review words with final consonant trigraphs so look at the ends of each word. A good example is the word 'catch'. Three consonants end the word and make a single sound.

Publisher	New Content	9781788051224	Teacher	625	Ideas at Home - add to end of first paragraph		Provide students with one grammatical structure, for each day of the task, that they should include in their diary entry. For example, on Monday, students may be asked to include a pronoun. "On Wednesday I plaited Kathryn's hair. Her hair is brown. She loved the plait." Have students bring their diary entries into class. Select a few students to read their entries aloud to the class; narrating their account of that day's activities. Students should then explain which grammatical structure they included in their diary entry, and how it was used. Discuss any misconceptions or inaccuracies.
Publisher	New Content	9781788051224	Teacher	672	Add to Focus Activity		Have students write a letter, to a character from their favorite book, describing what they did at the weekend. Encourage students to consider, and correctly use, verbs, tenses, pronouns, negatives and contractions, as their ability and understanding allows. For example, a student may write, "At the weekend I played soccer with my friend. We used my friend's soccer ball. I did not win, but I enjoyed the game." Ask students to include at least one example of possessive case in their letter. Once the students have completed this writing exercise, review the letter with them. Point out the grammatical structures students have used, and discuss if they have been used correctly. Discuss any misconceptions. Have students work in pairs or small groups. Students should take turns reading their letter aloud; narrating their account of the weekend activities. Students should then explain who they chose as their favorite character, and why. Students should ensure their descriptions, narrations, and explanations are detailed and specific.

Can you see any three consonant letters together that make one sound? Work with a partner and review the words 'school' and 'splash'. What do you notice? You may think that both words have three consonant trigraphs; this is not accurate. The 'sch' is at the start of the word. A final consonant trigraph demands the three letters making a single sound are at the end of the word. For example, 'ditch'. The words 'catch', 'pitch' and 'stitch' contain final consonant trigraphs. Work with your partner to find three more illustrations of words with final consonant trigraphs. Words with trigraphs using vowels and consonants are vowel-consonant trigraphs. A word such as 'Sigh' ends in a consonant. Add these five words to the list: "match, patch, hatch, itch, ditch" Add under these words: "These words are examples of final consonant trigraphs which are single sounds represented by three consonant letters. Look at the key words, 'Final', 'Consonant' and 'Trigraph'. A final consonant trigraph is where the last three letters of a word are consonants and make one single sound. Your teacher will help you with this language if it is beyond grade level."
Publisher	New Content	9781788051248	Student	71	Add key words and activity iv		Add words; schedule, batch, catch, latch, lunch, bunch, school iv. Decode the following words. Look at the final three letters and determine if they are consonants. Do the three letters make a single sound? If both are true you have found a word with a final consonant trigraph. Say the phonemes and say the final three consonant letters to illustrate one single sound. Circle the words that do not include final consonant trigraphs. Answer; schedule and school. Write some sentences that include final consonant trigraph words. Highlight each word that contains a final consonant trigraph. Words with trigraphs using vowels and consonants are vowel-consonant trigraphs. A word such as 'Sigh' ends in a consonant. Create sentences using only final consonant trigraphs.

Publisher	New Content	9781788051224	Teacher	625	Ideas at Home - add to end of first paragraph		Provide students with one grammatical structure, for each day of the task, that they should include in their diary entry. For example, on Monday, students may be asked to include a pronoun. "On Wednesday I plaited Kathryn's hair. Her hair is brown. She loved the plait." Have students bring their diary entries into class. Select a few students to read their entries aloud to the class; narrating their account of that day's activities. Students should then explain which grammatical structure they included in their diary entry, and how it was used. Discuss any misconceptions or inaccuracies.
Publisher	New Content	9781788051224	Teacher	672	Add to Focus Activity		Have students write a letter, to a character from their favorite book, describing what they did at the weekend. Encourage students to consider, and correctly use, verbs, tenses, pronouns, negatives and contractions, as their ability and understanding allows. For example, a student may write, "At the weekend I played soccer with my friend. We used my friend's soccer ball. I did not win, but I enjoyed the game." Ask students to include at least one example of possessive case in their letter. Once the students have completed this writing exercise, review the letter with them. Point out the grammatical structures students have used, and discuss if they have been used correctly. Discuss any misconceptions. Have students work in pairs or small groups. Students should take turns reading their letter aloud; narrating their account of the weekend activities. Students should then explain who they chose as their favorite character, and why. Students should ensure their descriptions, narrations, and explanations are detailed and specific.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050043	Student	19	paragraph 3 change to	The objective of this lesson is to use new vocabulary. This means learning new words and using them in real life. To do this you need to understand what words mean. You can use dictionaries to look up their definitions or meanings and you can use online resources to research the number of syllables in a word, how the word is said out loud or its pronunciation. You can also discover the word origin or where it came from and it's history and then use it in a sentence. It is important to use words in sentences because this gives them context and helps the reader understand the meaning of the word. You can also write analogies or comparisons to help someone understand the word meaning. As mentioned above a lot of words are derived from (came from) Greek and Latin words and the root of these words can be found to also help with understanding.	"The objective of this lesson is to use new vocabulary. This means learning new words and using them in real life. To do this you need to understand what words mean. To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. The type of word is know as ""part of speech"". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You can use print and online resources to look up: - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective It is important to use words in sentences, because this gives them context and helps the reader understand the meaning of the word. State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050043	Student	19	paragraph 3 change to	The objective of this lesson is to use new vocabulary. This means learning new words and using them in real life. To do this you need to understand what words mean. You can use dictionaries to look up their definitions or meanings and you can use online resources to research the number of syllables in a word, how the word is said out loud or its pronunciation. You can also discover the word origin or where it came from and its history and then use it in a sentence. It is important to use words in sentences because this gives them context and helps the reader understand the meaning of the word. You can also write analogies or comparisons to help someone understand the word meaning. As mentioned above a lot of words are derived from (came from) Greek and Latin words and the root of these words can be found to also help with understanding.	"The objective of this lesson is to use new vocabulary. This means learning new words and using them in real life. To do this you need to understand what words mean. To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. The type of word is known as ""part of speech"". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You can use print and online resources to look up: - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective It is important to use words in sentences, because this gives them context and helps the reader understand the meaning of the word. To do this you need to understand what words mean. You can use dictionaries to look up their definitions or meanings and you can use online resources to research the number of syllables in a word, how the word is said out loud or its pronunciation. You can also discover the word origin or where it came from and it's history and then use it in a sentence. It is important to use words in sentences because this gives them context and helps the reader understand the meaning of the word. You can also write analogies or comparisons to help someone understand the word meaning. As mentioned above a lot of words are derived from (came from) Greek and Latin words and the root of these words can be found to also help with understanding.	"The objective of this lesson is to use new vocabulary. This means learning new words and using them in real life. To do this you need to understand what words mean. To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. The type of word is know as ""part of speech"". Put simply, you will tell someone something to do. You will also listen to an instruction being given to you and follow it. The instruction you give should be to perform specific tasks. This means it should be clear what you want them to do. A bad example would be if you told them to fetch you any item. A good example would be if you told them to fetch you the second shortest red pencil, that can be found in the crayon box at the back of the third drawer on the right. This is specific and complex. You will give each other these tasks and work together to answer questions and demonstrate your problem-solving skills.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	1	Insert before 4th para		In this lesson, you will present a critique. A critique is another word for a review. To critique something means to evaluate something, in detail. You can choose whether to critique a literary work, film or dramatic production. A dramatic production is a play. A literary work is a written book. You will deliver your critique as part of an oral presentation. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	19	Insert after 1st para		To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. This is know as "part of speech". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You will use these resources to identify the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective

For example, if you are reading an informational text you might predict that it will have a conclusion and what the conclusion might be, based on the structure of the text. You can also use text features, characteristics of genre and text structure to confirm or correct your predictions. This means you can use those tools to confirm if your prediction was correct or if it was not you can correct it with what actually happened.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	146	Insert at end of page		Informational texts have characteristics and structural elements. You will analyze these in today's lesson. They are structured in to headings, subheading and paragraphs and usually start with an introduction and end with a conclusion. A characteristic of an informational text is a thesis. A thesis is a piece of research for a theory to be proven. In order to be proven, a thesis needs evidence to support it. A thesis is usually the controlling idea and driving force for an informational text. It is at the core of the content.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	147	Insert after first paragraph		The evidence presented in an argumentative text is a characteristic of the genre. The author uses various types of evidence to support the argument. If the author is trying to prove or disprove something and they only had one type of evidence, their argument wouldn't be very convincing. They may also consider an alternative or opposing stance in order to demonstrate to their reader that they have thoroughly investigated their argument. More likely, they will consider an alternative argument so that they can refute it and demonstrate why it is wrong. In today's lesson you will look at the various types of evidence used to support a claim and analyze the characteristics and structures of an argumentative text. You will endeavor to explain how the evidence used by author helps support their argument.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	155	add to point 6		Analyze the structure of the text. Identify the various types of evidence presented. State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	10	Insert after 3rd para		In this lesson, you will follow and give complex oral instructions. An oral instruction means it is spoken. Put simply, you will tell someone something to do. You will also listen to an instruction being given to you and follow it. The instruction you give should be to perform specific tasks. This means it should be clear what you want them to do. A bad example would be if you told them to fetch you any item. A good example would be if you told them to fetch you the second shortest red pencil, that can be found in the crayon box at the back of the third drawer on the right. This is specific and complex. You will give each other these tasks and work together to answer questions and demonstrate your problem-solving skills.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	10	Insert before 4th para		In this lesson, you will present a critique. A critique is another word for a review. To critique something means to evaluate something, in detail. You can choose whether to critique a literary work, film or dramatic production. A dramatic production is a play. A literary work is a written book. You will deliver your critique as part of an oral presentation. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	1	Insert after 3rd para		In this lesson, you will follow and give complex oral instructions. An oral instruction means it is spoken. Put simply, you will tell someone something to do. You will also listen to an instruction being given to you and follow it. The instruction you give should be to perform specific tasks. This means it should be clear what you want them to do. A bad example would be if you told them to fetch you any item. A good example would be if you told them to fetch you the second shortest red pencil, that can be found in the crayon box at the back of the third drawer on the right. This is specific and complex. You will give each other these tasks and work together to answer questions and demonstrate your problem-solving skills.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	1	Insert before 4th para		In this lesson, you will present a critique. A critique is another word for a review. To critique something means to evaluate something, in detail. You can choose whether to critique a literary work, film or dramatic production. A dramatic production is a play. A literary work is a written book. You will deliver your critique as part of an oral presentation. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	6	Point A in Procedure	Listen attentively to your teacher's instructions and explanations, ask clarifying questions when given the opportunity.	change to "Listen attentively to your teacher's instructions and explanations. State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	6	Point C in Procedure	As a team, prepare and give an organized and engaging presentation with your object as a visual aid.	change to "In your groups, work together to prepare and give an organized presentation. You should give each other instructions and follow them. This may be asking someone to stand in a certain place, say specific words or carry out a specific task. Once the presentation is finished you should answer questions. Ask the audience for feedback and solve any problems you find in your own presentation and other group's presentations."
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	6	Point C in Procedure		Add to the bottom: "Your presentation will deliver your critique of your chosen film, literary work or dramatic production. Remember to keep the audience engaged by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary You need to communicate your ideas effectively."

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	13	Insert at the bottom of the page		In groups, work together to create this game. Read out and give the instructions to each other, orally. Follow each other's instructions for making this game. This game will demonstrate your problem-solving skills and you will be answering questions. Think about how the game can be improved. What would you do differently?
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	19	Insert after 1st para		To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. This is know as "part of speech". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You will use these resources to identify the following: - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	65	add to 3rd bullet		You can also make predictions by looking at the structure of the text. For example, if you are reading an informational text you might predict that it will have a conclusion and what the conclusion might be, based on the structure of the text. You can also use text features, characteristics of genre and text structure to confirm or correct your predictions. This means you can use those tools to confirm if your prediction was correct or if it was not you can correct it with what actually happened.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	65	add to 5th bullet		You can also make connections to other texts with similar ideas. You might be reading a book about the rainforest and this can lead you to think of other books about conservation, wildlife and nature.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	71	add to the procedure		Think of some questions to ask before you start reading the article. While you are reading through the article think of questions you could ask about the article. Think of more questions once you have finished reading the article. Think about what more information you want. Generate questions about the text. This will deepen your understanding.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	91	add to 7th bullet		In today's lesson, you will discuss the implicit and explicit meanings within a text. Then, you will have the opportunity to write about them.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	127	add a bullet to the bottom of page 127		"While reading, try to infer what the theme of the text is. Refer to your key words for the definition of 'infer' and 'theme'. What do you think the theme is? What evidence from the text support this? What other texts have the same theme?"
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	134	whole page		add to the bottom: "Now that you have identified themes within a text, try the identify a theme across texts. Think of connections between texts with the same theme. Think of a series of books and what themes they may have."
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	146	Insert at end of page		Informational texts have characteristics and structural elements. You will analyze these in today's lesson. They are structured in to headings, subheading and paragraphs and usually start with an introduction and end with a conclusion. A characteristic of an informational text is a thesis. A thesis is a piece of research for a theory to be proven. In order to be proven, a thesis needs evidence to support it. A thesis is usually the controlling idea and driving force for an informational text. It is at the core of the content.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	147	Insert after first paragraph		The evidence presented in an argumentative text is a characteristic of the genre. The author uses various types of evidence to support the argument. If the author is trying to prove or disprove something and they only had one type of evidence, their argument wouldn't be very convincing. They may also consider an alternative or opposing stance in order to demonstrate to their reader that they have thoroughly investigated their argument. More likely, they will consider an alternative argument so that they can refute it and demonstrate why it is wrong. In today's lesson you will look at the various types of evidence used to support a claim and analyze the characteristics and structures of an argumentative text. You will endeavor to explain how the evidence used by author helps support their argument.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	1	Insert after 3rd para		In this lesson, you will follow and give complex oral instructions. An oral instruction means it is spoken. Put simply, you will tell someone something to do. You will also listen to an instruction being given to you and follow it. The instruction you give should be to perform specific tasks. This means it should be clear what you want them to do. A bad example would be if you told them to fetch you any item. A good example would be if you told them to fetch you the second shortest red pencil, that can be found in the crayon box at the back of the third drawer on the right. This is specific and complex. You will give each other these tasks and work together to answer questions and demonstrate your problem-solving skills.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	1	Insert before 4th para		In this lesson, you will present a critique. A critique is another word for a review. To critique something means to evaluate something, in detail. You can choose whether to critique a literary work, film or dramatic production. A dramatic production is a play. A literary work is a written book. You will deliver your critique as part of an oral presentation. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	6	Point C in Procedure	As a team, prepare and give an organized and engaging presentation with your object as a visual aid.	change to "In your groups, work together to prepare and give an organized presentation. You should give each other instructions and follow them. This may be asking someone to stand in a certain place, say specific words or carry out a specific task. Once the presentation is finished you should answer questions. Ask the audience for feedback and solve any problems you find in your own presentation and other group's presentations."

What would you do differently?
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	19	Insert after 1st para		To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. This is know as "part of speech". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You will use these resources to identify the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	65	add to 3rd bullet		You can also make predictions by looking at the structure of the text. For example, if you are reading an informational text you might predict that it will have a conclusion and what the conclusion might be, based on the structure of the text. You can also use text features, characteristics of genre and text structure to confirm or correct your predictions. This means you can use those tools to confirm if your prediction was correct or if it was not you can correct it with what actually happened.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	65	add to 5th bullet		You can also make connections to other texts with similar ideas. You might be reading a book about the rainforest and this can lead you to think of other books about conservation, wildlife and nature.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	71	add to the procedure		Think of some questions to ask before you start reading the article. While you are reading through the article think of questions you could ask about the article. Think of more questions once you have finished reading the article. Think about what more information you want. Generate questions about the text. This will deepen your understanding.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	91	add to 7th bullet		In today's lesson, you will discuss the implicit and explicit meanings within a text. Then, you will have the opportunity to write about them.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	146	Insert at end of page		Informational texts have characteristics and structural elements. You will analyze these in today's lesson. They are structured in to headings, subheading and paragraphs and usually start with an introduction and end with a conclusion. A characteristic of an informational text is a thesis. A thesis is a piece of research for a theory to be proven. In order to be proven, a thesis needs evidence to support it. A thesis is usually the controlling idea and driving force for an informational text. It is at the core of the content.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	147	Insert after first paragraph		The evidence presented in an argumentative text is a characteristic of the genre. The author uses various types of evidence to support the argument. If the author is trying to prove or disprove something and they only had one type of evidence, their argument wouldn't be very convincing. They may also consider an alternative or opposing stance in order to demonstrate to their reader that they have thoroughly investigated their argument. More likely, they will consider an alternative argument so that they can refute it and demonstrate why it is wrong. In today's lesson you will look at the various types of evidence used to support a claim and analyze the characteristics and structures of an argumentative text. You will endeavor to explain how the evidence used by author helps support their argument.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	155	add to point 6		Analyze the structure of the text. Identify the various types of evidence presented. State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	239	add to second paragraph		In today's lesson, you will use 'craft' to compose, or write, your own literary text. A literary text is a piece of writing. It could be a poem or a story. It's main purpose is to entertain.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050128	Student	252	add to first paragraph		As you learned earlier, a literary text is a piece of writing and it's purpose is to entertain. You will use 'craft' to compose a literary text of your own. Remember that 'craft' can mean to make something, but here we mean an author's craft. This is the tools and techniques an author uses to compose a literary text.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	15	Point C in Procedure	As a team, prepare and give an organized and engaging presentation with your object as a visual aid.	change to "In your groups, work together to prepare and give an organized presentation. You should give each other instructions and follow them. This may be asking someone to stand in a certain place, say specific words or carry out a specific task. Once the presentation is finished you should answer questions. Ask the audience for feedback and solve any problems you find in your own presentation and other group's presentations."
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	15	Point C in Procedure		Add to the bottom: "Your presentation will deliver your critique of your chosen film, literary work or dramatic production. Remember to keep the audience engaged by doing the following: - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary You need to communicate your ideas effectively."
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	22	Insert at the bottom of the page		In groups, work together to create this game. Read out and give the instructions to each other, orally. Follow each other's instructions for making this game. This game will demonstrate your problem-solving skills and you will be answering questions. Think about how the game can be improved. What would you do differently?
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	37	Insert after 1st para		To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. This is know as "part of speech". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You will use these resources to identify the following: - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	111	add to 3rd bullet		You can also make predictions by looking at the structure of the text. For example, if you are reading an informational text you might predict that it will have a conclusion and what the conclusion might be, based on the structure of the text. You can also use text features, characteristics of genre and text structure to confirm or correct your predictions. This means you can use those tools to confirm if your prediction was correct or if it was not you can correct it with what actually happened.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	111	add to 5th bullet		You can also make connections to other texts with similar ideas. You might be reading a book about the rainforest and this can lead you to think of other books about conservation, wildlife and nature.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	117	add to the procedure		Think of some questions to ask before you start reading the article. While you are reading through the article think of questions you could ask about the article. Think of more questions once you have finished reading the article. Think about what more information you want. Generate questions about the text. This will deepen your understanding.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	146	add to 7th bullet		In today's lesson, you will discuss the implicit and explicit meanings within a text. Then, you will have the opportunity to write about them.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	191	add a bullet to the bottom of page 127		"While reading, try to infer what the theme of the text is. Refer to your key words for the definition of 'infer' and 'theme'. What do you think the theme is? What evidence from the text support this? What other texts have the same theme?"
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	198	whole page		add to the bottom: "Now that you have identified themes within a text, try the identify a theme across texts. Think of connections between texts with the same theme. Think of a series of books and what themes they may have."

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	219	Insert at end of page		Informational texts have characteristics and structural elements. You will analyze these in today's lesson. They are structured in to headings, subheading and paragraphs and usually start with an introduction and end with a conclusion. A characteristic of an informational text is a thesis. A thesis is a piece of research for a theory to be proven. In order to be proven, a thesis needs evidence to support it. A thesis is usually the controlling idea and driving force for an informational text. It is at the core of the content.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	220	Insert after first paragraph		The evidence presented in an argumentative text is a characteristic of the genre. The author uses various types of evidence to support the argument. If the author is trying to prove or disprove something and they only had one type of evidence, their argument wouldn't be very convincing. They may also consider an alternative or opposing stance in order to demonstrate to their reader that they have thoroughly investigated their argument. More likely, they will consider an alternative argument so that they can refute it and demonstrate why it is wrong. In today's lesson you will look at the various types of evidence used to support a claim and analyze the characteristics and structures of an argumentative text. You will endeavor to explain how the evidence used by author helps support their argument.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	228	add to point 6		Analyze the structure of the text. Identify the various types of evidence presented. For each one, state how this helps the authors argument. Has the author considered an alternative or opposing stance? How does this consideration strengthen their argument?
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	343	add to second paragraph		In today's lesson, you will use 'craft' to compose, or write, your own literary text. A literary text is a piece of writing. It could be a poem or a story. It's main purpose is to entertain.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	356	add to first paragraph		As you learned earlier, a literary text is a piece of writing and it's purpose is to entertain. You will use 'craft' to compose a literary text of your own. Remember that 'craft' can mean to make something, but here we mean an author's craft. This is the tools and techniques an author uses to compose a literary text.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	357	add to bottom of page		"Write a poem (a type of literary text), using craft. Your poem should be on the same subject and it should follow the conventions of an informational text such as having subheadings and a main controlling idea."
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050135	Teacher	386	add to first paragraph		In today's lesson you will generate (think of) questions to ask for a formal and informal inquiry. Your teacher will guide you in the generation of your questions.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050166	Student	1	Insert after 3rd para		In this lesson, you will follow and give complex oral instructions. An oral instruction means it is spoken. Put simply, you will tell someone something to do. You will also listen to an instruction being given to you and follow it. The instruction you give should be to perform specific tasks. This means it should be clear what you want them to do. A bad example would be if you told them to fetch you any item. A good example would be if you told them to fetch you the second shortest red pencil, that can be found in the crayon box at the back of the third drawer on the right. This is specific and complex. You will give each other these tasks and work together to answer questions and demonstrate your problem-solving skills.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050166	Student	1	Insert before 4th para		In this lesson, you will present a critique. A critique is another word for a review. To critique something means to evaluate something, in detail. You can choose whether to critique a literary work, film or dramatic production. A dramatic production is a play. A literary work is a written book. You will deliver your critique as part of an oral presentation. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050166	Student	38	Insert after 1st para		To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. This is know as "part of speech". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You will use these resources to identify the following: - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050166	Student	137	add to 3rd bullet		You can also make predictions by looking at the structure of the text. For example, if you are reading an informational text you might predict that it will have a conclusion and what the conclusion might be, based on the structure of the text. You can also use text features, characteristics of genre and text structure to confirm or correct your predictions. This means you can use those tools to confirm if your prediction was correct or if it was not you can correct it with what actually happened.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050166	Student	137	add to 5th bullet		You can also make connections to other texts with similar ideas. You might be reading a book about the rainforest and this can lead you to think of other books about conservation, wildlife and nature.

They are structured in to headings, subheading and paragraphs and usually start with an introduction and end with a conclusion. A characteristic of an informational text is a thesis. A thesis is a piece of research for a theory to be proven. In order to be proven, a thesis needs evidence to support it. A thesis is usually the controlling idea and driving force for an informational text. It is at the core of the content.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050166	Student	258	Insert after first paragraph		The evidence presented in an argumentative text is a characteristic of the genre. Put simply, you will tell someone something to do. You will also listen to an instruction being given to you and follow it. The instruction you give should be to perform specific tasks. This means it should be clear what you want them to do. A bad example would be if you told them to fetch you any item. A good example would be if you told them to fetch you the second shortest red pencil, that can be found in the crayon box at the back of the third drawer on the right. This is specific and complex. You will give each other these tasks and work together to answer questions and demonstrate your problem-solving skills.

Publisher	New Content	9781788050173	Teacher	10	Insert before 4th para		In this lesson, you will present a critique. A critique is another word for a review. To critique something means to evaluate something, in detail. You can choose whether to critique a literary work, film or dramatic production. A dramatic production is a play. A literary work is a written book. You will deliver your critique as part of an oral presentation. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

What would you do differently?
Publisher	New Content	9781788050173	Teacher	61	Insert after 1st para		To help you learn more about words you can use print and digital resources. A resource is something that helps you. You might first think of a print dictionary or a thesaurus. You can also find digital version of these online. In today's lesson you will practice using both. A dictionary is a list of all the words in that language. It will show you the correct spelling, alternate spellings, multiple meanings and what type of word it is. This is know as "part of speech". A thesaurus is a list of words with similar meanings. You will use these resources to identify the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - syllabication - this means the number of syllables or sounds within a word - pronunciation - this is how a word is pronounced, or sounded out loud - word origin - this is where the word originated from, where did it come from? - part of speech - this is the type of word, for example a noun, verb or adjective
Publisher	New Content	9781788050173	Teacher	215	add to 3rd bullet		You can also make predictions by looking at the structure of the text. For example, if you are reading an informational text you might predict that it will have a conclusion and what the conclusion might be, based on the structure of the text. You can also use text features, characteristics of genre and text structure to confirm or correct your predictions. This means you can use those tools to confirm if your prediction was correct or if it was not you can correct it with what actually happened.

State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050203	Student	6	Procedure, add point F.		When planning for your presentation make sure you do all of the following: - participate collaboratively in discussions - this means to work together, everyone has a voice and gets to share their opinion, this is a collaboration - plan agendas with clear goals and deadlines - make a timeline of events, it should include what you want to achieve (goal) and by when (deadline) - set time limits for speakers - decide who in the group will speak, and how long they will speak for, practice and time one another to make sure no one runs over - take notes - when having your discussions make sure to take notes of what everyone thinks - vote on key issues - if there is a debate or disagreement in your groups, call for a vote You will have to submit evidence of each of these points to your teacher. Write a report on the key issues of debate, the vote results, who spoke and what their time limit was, your notes during the discussions and what goals and deadlines you had.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050203	Student	6	Add to the bottom		You will be doing a presentation, in today's class. You should set time limits for each speaker. You may want to give each person the same amount of time or you may want to give the stronger speakers more time. It is important to stick to time limits because if you run over your time it will affect the rest of the presentation and vital information may get rushed or missed altogether.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050203	Student	14	Add a bullet point at the end		Control your speaking rate. Do not speak too fast or too slow. If you speak too fast, the audience will miss what you say. If you speak too slow, the audience will lose interest.

Publisher	New Content	9781788050203	Student	6	Procedure point D.	Tell students that in this lesson they will be creating patterns and figuring out the patterns that other students created.	As a team, prepare and give a short organized and engaging presentation of your methods of categorizing the words. In your presentation, you should advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies, and/or illustrations. To advocate something means to support it. An anecdote is a short entertaining story about real events and people. An analogy is when you compare two or more things to each other in order to convey, explain and clarify meaning. An illustration is a picture. The aim of this activity is to advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies and illustrations. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

Tell students that in this lesson they will be creating patterns and figuring out the patterns that other students created.	As a team, prepare and give a short organized and engaging presentation of your methods of categorizing the words. In your presentation, you should advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies, and/or illustrations. To advocate something means to support it. An anecdote is a short entertaining story about real events and people. An analogy is when you compare two or more things to each other in order to convey, explain and clarify meaning. An illustration is a picture. The aim of this activity is to advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies and illustrations. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

In your presentation, you should advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies, and/or illustrations. To advocate something means to support it. An anecdote is a short entertaining story about real events and people. An analogy is when you compare two or more things to each other in order to convey, explain and clarify meaning. An illustration is a picture. The aim of this activity is to advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies and illustrations. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

Write a report on the key issues of debate, the vote results, who spoke and what their time limit was, your notes during the discussions and what goals and deadlines you had.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050241	Student	6	Add to the bottom		You will be doing a presentation, in today's class. You should set time limits for each speaker. You may want to give each person the same amount of time or you may want to give the stronger speakers more time. It is important to stick to time limits because if you run over your time it will affect the rest of the presentation and vital information may get rushed or missed altogether.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050241	Student	14	Add a bullet point at the end		Control your speaking rate. Do not speak too fast or too slow. If you speak too fast, the audience will miss what you say. If you speak too slow, the audience will lose interest.

Tell students that in this lesson they will be creating patterns and figuring out the patterns that other students created.	As a team, prepare and give a short organized and engaging presentation of your methods of categorizing the words. In your presentation, you should advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies, and/or illustrations. To advocate something means to support it. An anecdote is a short entertaining story about real events and people. An analogy is when you compare two or more things to each other in order to convey, explain and clarify meaning. An illustration is a picture. The aim of this activity is to advocate a position using anecdotes, analogies and illustrations. You must communicate your ideas effectively. This means making sure the audience understands the message you are giving. You can achieve this by doing the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - employing eye contact - look at the audience to get your message across - employing speaking rate - speak at an appropriate rate, not too fast or too slow - employing volume - speak at an appropriate volume, not too loud or too quiet - employing enunciation - pronounce each word correctly and with stress on the important words - employing natural gestures - illustrate points with your hands - employing conventions of language - do not use slang, speak with the appropriate vocabulary

State Review Panel	Editorial Change	9781788050241	Student	6	First bullet in procedure	Listen attentively to your teacher's instructions and explanations, ask clarifying questions when given the opportunity.	put a period after the word "explanations," and start a new sentence with the word "ask."
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050241	Student	6	Procedure, add point F.		When planning for your presentation make sure you do all of the following: - participate collaboratively in discussions - this means to work together, everyone has a voice and gets to share their opinion, this is a collaboration - plan agendas with clear goals and deadlines - make a timeline of events, it should include what you want to achieve (goal) and by when (deadline) - set time limits for speakers - decide who in the group will speak, and how long they will speak for, practice and time one another to make sure no one runs over - take notes - when having your discussions make sure to take notes of what everyone thinks - vote on key issues - if there is a debate or disagreement in your groups, call for a vote You will have to submit evidence of each of these points to your teacher. Write a report on the key issues of debate, the vote results, who spoke and what their time limit was, your notes during the discussions and what goals and deadlines you had.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050241	Student	6	Add to the bottom		You will be doing a presentation, in today's class. You should set time limits for each speaker. You may want to give each person the same amount of time or you may want to give the stronger speakers more time. It is important to stick to time limits because if you run over your time it will affect the rest of the presentation and vital information may get rushed or missed altogether.
State Review Panel	New Content	9781788050241	Student	14	Add a bullet point at the end		Control your speaking rate. Do not speak too fast or too slow. If you speak too fast, the audience will miss what you say. If you speak too slow, the audience will lose interest.

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120040	Teacher	15	Bottom of page, "Occupational Therapist Tip" text	Replace with Occupational Therapist Tip originally appearing on page 96.	New text: Consistent Paper Using different kinds of paper with multiple line variations can be very confusing for students, especially those with visual perceptual difficulties. Be sure to make an effort to use the same paper across subjects and explain how to write correctly on different paper each time it is introduced.
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120040	Teacher	19	Bottom of page, "Occupational Therapist Tip" text	Replace with Occupational Therapist Tip originally appearing on page 136.	New text: Drawing Drawing is an important precursor to writing. Encourage students to draw regularly and to include simple geometric shapes in their drawings. Provide simple examples of how to draw everyday items, such as a cat, two-lane road, or flag. Have students copy and, if they wish, refine these simple models.
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120040	Teacher	25	Bottom of page, "English Language Learners" text	Change ELL tip to: Ask volunteers to come to the board. Have them say the names of the days of the week from their native language while you write them on the board. Ask other volunteers to come to the board and use different-colored chalk or marker to retrace the diagonal lines.
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120040	Teacher	31	Bottom of page, "English Language Learners" text	Change ELL tip to: Ask volunteers to come to the board. Have them say the names of the months of the year from their native calendar while you write them on the board. Ask other volunteers to come to the board and use different-colored chalk or marker to retrace the diagonal lines.
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120040	Teacher	96	Bottom of page, "Occupational Therapist Tip" text	Replace with Occupational Therapist Tip originally appearing on page 15.	New text: Flipping Buttons Give each student 10 buttons or coins to set in a row on their desk or table. Instruct students to try to turn each button/coin over as quickly as possible using just their fingertips. Tell them that they may not slide the buttons to the edge of their desk to assist with flipping. This activity improves in-hand manipulation and encourages students to keep their fingertips curved while picking up the small objects.
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120040	Teacher	136	Bottom of page, "Occupational Therapist Tip" text	Replace with Occupational Therapist Tip originally appearing on page 19.	New text: Hoop Game Place a plastic hoop on the floor; then tape a line approximately eight feet away. Have students stand at the line and try to toss beanbags into the hoop. This gross motor activity enables students to practice hand-eye coordination and visual perceptual skills that will help when they are learning the formation of letters.

Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120057	Teacher	4	Bottom of page, "Occupational Therapist Tip" text	Replace with Occupational Therapist Tip originally appearing on page 36.	New text: Signing In Create a daily attendance routine by requiring students to sign in by drawing a shape or writing the letter of the week in boxes next to their names. To encourage correct size, remind them that the shape/letter needs to touch the top and bottom of the box. Place the attendance sheet on a vertical surface to promote upper-extremity strengthening and proper grasp.
Publisher	Editorial Change	9781453120057	Teacher	20	Top left of page, "Handwriting Coach" text	Replace with Handwriting Coach text originally appearing on page 105.	New text: Practice Too much practice writing letters in isolation will discourage most students. Meaningful writing activities include friendly letters, jokes and riddles, nametags or labels, charts, vocabulary cards, and simple stories or poems. Writing may be done in cooperative groups. And remember: practice makes permanent, not perfect.
