REVISING
Read the selection and choose the best answer to each question. Then fill in the answer on your answer document.

Gabby wrote the following paper about the history of dining utensils. Read Gabby’s paper and look for revisions she needs to make. Then answer the questions that follow.

How We Eat

(1) Most people don’t pay attention to dining utensils at meals. (2) People care more about the food they are eating than how they eat the food. (3) Utensils have a history that is worth knowing. (4) If people learn how utensils have changed over the years, they will appreciate them more.

(5) Let’s start with a brief history of spoons. (6) First of all, spoons didn’t always look like they do today. (7) Early spoons were longer than modern-day spoons because they were mainly used to dip into and scoop up cooked foods. (8) Shells, wood, and animal horns were the stuff used to make the first spoons. (9) Later, durable metals, such as silver and gold, were used to create spoons. (10) These metal spoons were mainly used by wealthy members of society.

(11) The first forks were used for cooking, not for eating. (12) They had two long, sharp metal tines for holding food over a fire. (13) During the Middle Ages, forks were smaller and became more widely used for eating. (14) Not everyone liked the idea of using forks, though. (15) For example, a guest was disgusted when he noticed an emperor’s niece using a tiny golden fork at a feast. (16) The guest said that people should simply use the natural tool they were given—their fingers!

(17) Early knives often had elaborate metalwork on their handles. (18) These knives were expensive, so it was common for dinner guests to bring their own knives to dinner to cut and spear their food. (19) Knives at the table made some people nervous, though. (20) King Louis XIV signed a decree in 1669 banning most knives from the table. (21) Other rules about knives soon followed. (22) For example, knives were permitted only if their points were ground down so that they were safer. (23) Additionally, guests turned the blades of their knives toward their dinnerplates as a friendly gesture.

(24) Having changed over time, there are still more changes to utensils to meet modern needs. (25) Some restaurants and cafeterias offer sporks, a combination of the spoon and fork, for convenience. (26) In 2003, Joachim Nordwall developed an eating utensil that has a fork on one end and a spoon on the opposite end. (27) These devices are popular with campers, who have bought over 20 million of them.

(28) Today there are plans for new kinds of eating utensils. (29) From a tiny spoon that holds a single morsel of meat to a curved utensil that dangles bacon, inventors are coming up with creative ways to help people eat.
7 Gabby would like to add a more effective controlling idea. Which sentence should replace sentence 3 to serve as a more effective controlling idea for her paper?

A People should pay more attention to eating with the proper forks, knives, and spoons at mealtime.

B The following details provide the information about how forks, spoons, and knives are used around the world.

C Yet, the story of how modern-day forks, spoons, and knives developed is an interesting journey through time.

D However, most people have no idea that forks, spoons, and knives have been in existence for thousands of years.

Gabby wrote the following paper about the history of dining utensils. Read Gabby’s paper and look for revisions she needs to make. Then answer the questions that follow.

How We Eat

(1) Most people don’t pay attention to dining utensils at meals. (2) People care more about the food they are eating than how they eat the food. (3) Yet, the story of how modern-day forks, spoons, and knives developed is an interesting journey through time. (4) If people learn how utensils have changed over the years, they will appreciate them more.

(5) Let’s start with a brief history of spoons. (6) In addition, spoons didn’t always look like they do today. (7) Early spoons were longer than modern-day spoons because they were mainly used to dip into and scoop up cooked foods. (8) Shells, wood, and animal horns were the materials used to make the first spoons. (9) Later, durable metals, such as silver and gold, were used to create spoons. (10) These metal spoons were mainly used by wealthy members of society.

(11) The first forks were used for cooking, not for eating. (12) They had a different shape though. (13) During the Middle Ages, forks were smaller and became more widely used for eating, but not everyone liked the idea of using them. (14) For example, a guest was disgusted when he noticed an emperor’s niece using a tiny golden fork at a feast. (15) The guest said that people should simply use exactly what they were given—their fingers!

(16) Early knives often had elaborate metalwork on their handles. (17) The designs on these metal knives had layers of details. (18) These knives were expensive, so it was common for dinner guests to bring their own knives to dinner to cut and spear their food. (19) Knives at the table made some people nervous, though. (20) For this reason, King Louis XIV signed a decree in 1669 banning most knives from the table. (21) Other rules about knives soon followed.
